NYMAG.COM MUELLER REPORT CONFIRMS TRUMP RUNS THE WHITE HOUSE LIKE IT'S THE MAFIA

Donald Trump is running the American government like a business – or, if we're being precise, like a criminal enterprise.

The president's penchant for asking himself, "What would Roy Cohn advise John Gotti to do?" has been clear for some time. Last August, Trump said of the possibility that Michael Cohen would cooperate with Robert Mueller's investigation, "I know all about flipping. It should almost be illegal." Around that same time, the president insisted that his White House counsel, Don McGahn, was not a "a John Dean type 'RAT'" — a reference to President Nixon's lawyer, who testified (truthfully) about his boss's attempts to obstruct justice. And Trump has repeatedly argued that the U.S. attorney general's primary responsibility is to demonstrate unflinching loyalty to the president, as though the federal government was the Mafia and Trump its godfather. Thus, Robert Mueller's investigation was never going to reveal that the leader of the free world thinks like a mobster, as that was something we already knew. Nevertheless, the special counsel's report does confirm that fact by detailing three previously unreported instances in which the president's behavior was indistinguishable from that of a mafioso:

The president berated the White House counsel for keeping records on their interactions because “lawyers don’t take notes.”

In June 2017, Trump directed Don McGahn to have Robert Mueller fired. McGahn then let it be known that he would resign before carrying out such an order.

By the following January, the New York Times had gotten wind of that conversation. And when the paper’s story hit newsstands, Trump ordered McGahn to dispute the report. McGahn refused. In a tense Oval Office meeting, Trump further pressured the White House counsel to dispute the Times story — and then asked McGahn about his recent conversations with Mueller’s office. A very mobster-esque exchange ensued:

The President also asked McGahn in the meeting why he had told Special Counsel’s Office investigators that the President had told him to have the Special Counsel removed. McGahn responded that he had to and that his conversations with the President were not protected by attorney-client privilege. The President then asked, “What about these notes? Why do you take notes? Lawyers don’t take notes. I never had a lawyer who took notes.” McGahn responded that he keeps notes because he is a “real lawyer” and explained that notes create a record and are not a bad thing. The President said, “I’ve had a lot of great lawyers, like Roy Cohn. He did not take notes.”

The president once refused to look at evidence of his underlings’ misdeeds lest he end up knowing too much.

In June 2017, Trump learned of the existence of the (now infamous) emails in which his eldest son arranged a meeting with purported Russian operatives at Trump Tower the previous summer (“If it’s what you say I love it”). Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner then tried to fill in the president on documents ostensibly related to that meeting. Trump demurred:

Communications advisors Hope Hicks and Josh Raffel recalled discussing with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump that the emails were damaging and would inevitably be leaked. Hicks and Raffel advised that the best strategy was to proactively release the emails to the press. On or about June 22, 2017, Hicks attended a meeting in the White House residence with the President, Kushner, and Ivanka Trump.

According to Hicks, Kushner said that he wanted to fill the President in on something that had been discovered in the documents he was to provide to the congressional committees involving a meeting with him, Manafort, and Trump Jr. Kushner brought a folder of documents to the meeting and tried to show them to the President, but the President stopped Kushner and said he did not want to know about it, shutting the conversation down. [my emphasis]

After Michael Flynn refused to brief Trump on what he had told federal authorities, Trump's personal lawyer informed Flynn that the president would take note of his "hostility."

In November 2017, Trump's former national security adviser Michael Flynn started cooperating with the special counsel, and withdrew from a joint defense agreement he'd struck with the president. Hours after Trump learned of Flynn's decision, his personal lawyer left a voice-mail for Flynn's counsel:

I understand your situation, but let me see if I can't state it in starker terms ... [I]t wouldn't surprise me if you've gone on to make a deal with ... the government ... [I]f ... there's information that implicates the President, then we've got a national security issue ... so, you know ... we need some kind of heads up. Um, just for the sake of protecting all our interests if we can [R]emember what we've always said about the President and his feelings toward Flynn and that still remains.

Flynn's counsel then informed the president's attorney that it could not provide Trump with such a "heads up." Trump's counsel responded by warning that he would inform the boss of Flynn's "hostility."

The President's personal counsel said that he interpreted what they said to him as a reflection of Flynn's hostility towards the President and that he planned to inform his client of that interpretation. Flynn's attorneys understood that statement to be an attempt to make them reconsider their position because the President's personal counsel believed that Flynn would be disturbed to know that such a message would be conveyed to the President. [my emphasis]

These anecdotes do not prove that Trump committed obstruction of justice, much less that he participated in a criminal conspiracy with the Russian government. But, assuming that we all agree the American government should not be run like a criminal business, these excerpts alone establish that Congress should not allow Donald Trump to continue being president.

donny’s poem

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness ..."

"And comes now this hopeless, vicious buffoon, and the audience of equally hopeless and vicious buffoons who laughed and cheered when he made sport of a woman whose lasting memory of the trauma she suffered is the laughter of the perpetrators. Now he comes, a man swathed in scandal, with no interest beyond what he can put in his pocket and what he can put over on a universe of suckers, and he does something like this while occupying an office that we gave him, and while endowed with a public trust that he dishonors every day he wakes up in the White House.

"The scion of a multigenerational criminal enterprise, the parameters of which we are only now beginning to comprehend. A vessel for all the worst elements of the American condition. And a cheap, soulless bully besides. We never have had such a cheap counterfeit of a president* as currently occupies the office. We never have had a president* so completely deserving of scorn and yet so small in the office that it almost seems a waste of time and energy to summon up the requisite contempt.

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness, and who cannot find in himself the decency simply to shut up even when it is in his best interest to do so. Presidents don't have to be heroes to be good presidents. They just have to realize that their humanity is our common humanity and that their political commonwealth is our political commonwealth, too.

Watch him behind the seal of the President of the United States. Isn't he a funny man? Isn't what happened to that lady hilarious? Watch the assembled morons cheer. This is the only story now."

Complaints of judicial misconduct set off an investigation of Judge Maryanne Trump Barry. In retirement, she is no longer subject to the conduct rules. Credit Jonathan Ernst/Reuters

By Russ Buettner and Susanne Craig

April 10, 2019

President Trump's older sister, Maryanne Trump Barry, has retired as a federal appellate judge, ending an investigation into whether she violated judicial conduct rules by participating in fraudulent tax schemes with her siblings.

The court inquiry stemmed from complaints filed last October, after an investigation by The New York Times found that the Trumps had engaged in dubious tax schemes during the 1990s, including instances of outright fraud, that greatly increased the inherited wealth of Mr. Trump and his siblings. Judge Barry not only benefited financially from most of those tax schemes, The Times found; she was also in a position to influence the actions taken by her family.

Judge Barry, now 82, has not heard cases in more than two years but was still listed as an inactive senior judge, one step short of full retirement. In a letter dated Feb. 1, a court official notified the four individuals who had filed the complaints that the investigation was “receiving the full attention” of a judicial conduct council. Ten days later, Judge Barry filed her retirement papers.

The status change rendered the investigation moot, since retired judges are not subject to the conduct rules. The people who filed the complaints were notified last week that the matter had been dropped without a finding on the merits of the allegations. The decision has not yet been made public, but copies were provided to The Times by two of the complainants. Both are involved in the legal profession.

Judge Barry did not respond to emails or telephone messages left at her Manhattan apartment.

Judicial council reviews can result in the censure or reprimand of federal judges, and in extremely rare cases, a referral to the House of Representatives for impeachment.

In retirement, Judge Barry is entitled to receive annually the salary she earned when she last met certain workload requirements. Though the exact figure was not immediately available, it appears to be between $184,500 and $217,600.

The Times investigation focused on how the profits and ownership of the real estate empire built by the president’s father, Fred C. Trump, were transferred to Donald J. Trump and his siblings, often in ways designed to dodge gift and estate taxes.

A lawyer for the president, Charles J. Harder, said last fall, “The New York Times’s allegations of fraud and tax evasion are 100 percent false, and highly defamatory.”

Judge Barry had been a co-owner of a shell company — All County Building Supply & Maintenance — created by the family to siphon cash from their father’s empire by marking up purchases already made by his employees, The Times investigation found. Judge Barry, her siblings and a cousin split the markup, free of gift and estate taxes, which at the time were levied at a much higher rate than income taxes.

2:04How the Trumps Held On to Generational Wealth

By the end of 1997, Donald Trump and his siblings owned nearly all of Fred Trump's empire, free and clear of estate taxes. How did they do it? A special type of trust with a clunky acronym: GRAT, short for grantor-retained annuity trust. It is one of the tax code's great gifts to the ultrawealthy.

On a financial disclosure form filed in 1999, Judge Barry noted that her share of the All County profits for the previous 17 months totaled just over $1 million.

The family also used the padded invoices to justify higher rent increases in rent-regulated buildings, artificially inflating the rents of thousands of tenants. Former prosecutors told The Times that if the authorities had discovered at the time how the Trumps were using All County, their actions would have warranted a criminal investigation for defrauding tenants, tax fraud and filing false documents.

Similarly, Judge Barry benefited from the gross undervaluation of her father's properties when she and her siblings took ownership of them through a trust, sparing them from paying tens of millions of dollars in taxes, The Times found. For years, she attended regular briefings at her brother's offices in Trump Tower to hear updates on the real estate portfolio and to collect her share of the profits. When the siblings sold off their father's empire, between 2004 and 2006, her share of the windfall was $182.5 million, The Times found.

Judge Barry was nominated to the Federal District Court in New Jersey by President Ronald Reagan in 1983, after several years as a federal prosecutor. She was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by President Bill Clinton in 1999.

In February 2017, shortly after her brother's inauguration, she notified the court that she would stop hearing cases and give up her staff and chambers. She was then considered a senior inactive judge, a status that did not entitle her to salary increases, but that left her still subject to conduct inquiries. Judge Barry did not announce a reason for the change at the time.

Following confidentiality requirements, Judge Barry's name does not appear on the order ending the investigation or the correspondence with the complainants. The order identifies the judge in question as a senior inactive judge, about whom complaints were filed in October 2018. Under court rules, all complaints are reviewed by a judge, and those with an allegation of misconduct or disability are generally referred to a panel of judges for investigation.

Susan Barth

Robin Alperstein wrote:

Two things are happening simultaneously in front of our eyes, and they are interconnected, terrifying, and enraging.

The first is that Trump is unraveling, becoming more unhinged and erratic almost by the day. He is in open cognitive decline. You don't have to be a shrink or neuropsychologist to see it. That cognitive decline -- which is occurring under a microscope before a world audience of billions -- would be scary and destabilizing enough on its own; but married to the character traits of a sociopath, it is incredibly dangerous. The rage and lack of capacity, the flailing, the insults, the paranoia, the self-aggrandizement, the raw hatred, the lies, the attacks on others, the rejection of truth and attacks on the most basic of democratic institutions, the vindictiveness and pettiness, the frothing obsession over his own illegitimacy....These are all getting worse and worse, in plain sight.

The second is that the GOP has coalesced further around Trump and even those who some of us thought were "reachable" are doubling down in support of his assaults on fundamental precepts required for our country to function as a democratic state. In some ways this is, of course, a continuation of the Reagan/Bush projects, of Newt Gingrich, and of Mitch McConnell's rejection of democracy when Obama was elected. But still there was some residual hope or belief that at least some of these GOP Congress people would act to preserve the Congress as a co-equal branch of government, abide by the Constitution, protect this country from foreign enemies and influence, repel fascism, and reject the forces of darkness that are rising across Europe, South America, and elsewhere.

But as Trump's depredations and Constitutional violations and lies have increased and worsened, as the devolution continues, and our norms are shattered with impunity, the GOP has not said "no." It has not said "enough is enough." There is no McCarthy moment that is going to happen.

And no matter how unhinged, how patently unfit, how incompetent, how erratic, how vile, how cruel, how dangerous, or how criminal Trump's conduct appears to be, they will close their ranks and defend him. They will support Barr's cover-up and declare "Mission Accomplished"; they will defend ripping children from their parents' arms; they will support his dismantling of the FBI's domestic terrorism unit even as Trump inspires such terrorists at home and abroad; they will fight against the Violence Against Women Act as they support an admitted and accused sexual assaulter and seek to strip women of any control over their own bodies and lives; they will rubber-stamp religious fanatics and extremists whose views are rejected by 80% of Americans into lifelong positions from which they can tyrannize the rest of the country; they will sabotage any and all efforts to protect the planet; they will refuse to bring to a vote critical reforms necessary to remove the pernicious and undemocratic influence of big money and corporations and foreigners from our elections; they will not protect our voting machines and will continue to actively prevent people from voting; they will let critical appointments go unfilled or staffed by corrupt stooges that Putin would salivate over.

And they will gaslight us all and pretend this is normal; they will attack Democrats as "partisans" for daring to believe that a monster like Trump should not be above the law; that it is fine to let his unqualified children into the government and have security clearances over everyone's objection; they will refuse to permit or join in necessary examination into the ways in which the Trump crime family's business interests now substitute for foreign policy.

And no matter how insane he acts, no matter how he treats everyone but his cult as an enemy to be attacked rather than as citizens whom he has a Constitutional obligation to protect, the worse he behaves, it is clear there will be no 25th Amendment solution. They will defend his cognition just as they defend his attacks on children, the Democrats, women, POC, immigrants, the LGBTQIA community, the disabled, the press, and truth. They will lie for him, they will cheat for him, because he is them and they are him. And they will do everything in their power to ensure that Trump and his family are never held accountable. And mocking Trump for saying "oranges" instead of "origins" isn't funny -- he is losing his ability to speak because he has dementia. But you'll never hear the GOP admit that.

Things were bad before but they are getting worse because Trump is emboldened, and so is his party. The government is run by monsters like Stephen Miller, a creature so debased and straight out of central casting he is practically a mirage, and by corrupt arrogant bastards like Mnuchin and Ross and McConnell, and by lickspittles like Graham and Barr and Pence whose servile prostration before Trump would be comical were it not so nauseating and dangerous. Not one has a shred of integrity; not one puts the Constitution or the country first.

I see a lot of people turning away in disgust from the news, from Twitter, from FB, from conversation, and, also from ACTION. I see fear and despair. And so much exhaustion.

I share these feelings. This past week, with Barr's testimony and the state-level efforts to criminalize abortion and the disrespect of Mnuchin for Waters and the rank imbecility of that moronic rep toward John Kerry and the attacks on Schiff and the odious criminal Netanyahu's re-election, I have wanted to disappear or close my eyes or just pretend this is not our world.

But it is. And it can get far worse; that is what the GOP across the country with Trump at its helm is trying to do. It is going to continue to get worse and there is no easy fix for our broken political system.

We have two choices. Fight; or give up and let them win.

Fighting doesn't guarantee our victory. But giving up guarantees theirs.

I am deeply conscious of the privilege that lets me feel that I am "fighting" -- I can physically and financially show up in ways that many others can't. But yet I don't do nearly enough; nothing I do is ever enough; nothing can ever be enough. And sometimes it feels futile and hopeless, and I don't think "the need for self-care" is a good enough excuse for not doing more. I know I need to do more. And when I am tired I think about how I will feel when things get even worse if I did nothing to try to stop it. When my children or grandchildren ask me, "what did you do to stop Trump?" at least I will have a decent answer for them. I will have a list.

And I think that if we all recognize that there are no saviors, no magic, easy fixes, no clean cure for the GOP's rot or its supporters' racism and misogyny or just pure unadulterated selfishness, if we just recognize that each of us has it in us to do something, something more than just vote, and maybe to find a single project to work on to support NOW, not a year from now, not six weeks before the election, not the weekend before the elections, but now, this year, and all year long, we will be able to save ourselves the way we started to in 2018. But our odds will be worse; Trump and the GOP will be further entrenched in their descent into fascism, and their assaults on democracy will be even further normalized. They push back and fight against every gain we make, they obstruct all progress. This is not a one-off fight. And it sucks. We should not have to fight all the time, all the time, for decency, or for our lives. But this is how the marginalized in this country have lived their lives, always: assaulted, gaslighted, fighting to take up space, to be allowed autonomy, to count. This is what BLM is about. Trump and the GOP have made it crystal clear that, in fact, very few lives matter to them; and most of those lives are rich and white and male and straight and donate to the GOP.

Many of us are not used to living this way. It's a horrible way to live, but people adapt, don't they? They become inured or they fight. Or both.

I refuse to become inured. I hope you will do the same.

Analysis: Trump's shameful about-face on Otto Warmbier

Otto Warmbier's family rebukes Trump, says Kim Jong Un is responsible for son's death

Opinion: Trump's Warmbier comments mark shameful day for US (CNN)It almost sounded like compassion -- compassion for the North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un -- when President Donald Trump explained that Kim "felt very badly" about what had happened to Otto Warmbier, the 22-year-old American student taken prisoner by Kim's henchmen for 17 months. Gone were Trump's charges that Kim runs a "brutal regime," which he stated when Warmbier was returned to the United States in 2017-- in a coma. He died less than a week later.

At a press conference in Hanoi on Thursday, Trump said of Kim, "I will take him at his word."

It was another demeaning moment not only for Trump, who has gushed about the tyrant on several occasions, but also for America. And it was made even more humiliating for the United States when the President heaped additional praise on Kim's "great leadership," which he said will bring much success to his country.....'

Susan Edelman Blank AUTHORS OF THE DANGEROUS CASE OF DONALD TRUMP TO RELEASE MENTAL HEALTH ANALYSIS OF MUELLER REPORT

If One is Too Incompetent to Commit a Crime, Despite Trying Hard, Is One Competent to be President?

The Mueller Report may not have enough to indict a president, but it is a document of extraordinary evidence on mental incapacity

Washington, DC, April 25, 2019 — Leading psychiatrists, psychologists, and mental health experts have released a “report on the Mueller report, ”highlighting its extensive documentation of Donald Trump’s psychological characteristics that point to dangerousness and incapacity to serve in his office. Beyond previous reports of actions and statements, the Mueller report shows the more compelling patterns of impulsivity, recklessness, a lack of firm grip on reality, manipulation of advisors, absorption in self-interest that overrides national interest, inability to consider consequences before taking action, paranoid reactions, an attraction to violence, and an absence of empathy, as well as apparent cognitive and memory difficulties. Without diagnosing, these make the President clearly a danger in his role as Commander in Chief and one on whom the world relies for steady and wise actions in international affairs.

We are among the 37 mental health experts, including some of the most renowned psychiatrists and psychologists in the country, who put their analysis in the bestselling book, The Dangerous Case of Donald Trump. An April 2017 conference at Yale School of Medicine, organized by Yale professor Bandy X. Lee clarified the responsibility of mental health professionals to society to point out dangers in our midst and to share their expertise in helping the public to recognize and address those dangers. That conference led to two editions of this public-service book and the World Mental Health Coalition (dangerouscase.org), an organization of thousands of mental health professionals who have joined together to step up in addressing the dangers posed by the president.

Now, the Mueller report brings new evidence as well as confirmation of the evidence on which we based our assessment two years ago. As detailed in the document released today, the Mueller report further confirms the reasons why we believed that the president’s condition was severe and would only grow worse over time in his current position.

Seldom do mental health professionals have the quantity of detailed information the Mueller report provides of an individual's behavior, verified with the caliber of a criminal investigation of the highest order. Now, we can state with a high level of confidence, based on data that vastly exceed what we ordinarily have in clinical practice, that the evidence of the president's mental incapacity is overwhelming.

In the interest of making a reasonable attempt to obtain a personal interview, we request that the president sit through a formal evaluation by a panel of independent experts, which the President should be able to agree to if he believes he is fit to serve. We request that he agree to do so within three weeks. We believe that, given the enormous high-quality data now available, and the extreme dangers implied in presidential incapacity, it is imperative that the president clarify the matter of incapacity through a thorough examination. In the event of refusal, we believe that we have enough evidence to come to a conclusion and will pursue this in the ensuing weeks.

'Obstruction of justice-the statute making obstruction criminal-prohibits interfering, or attempting to interfere, with a criminal prosecution or an investigation the government's conducting' Napolitano said. The Mueller Report, Napolitano believes, lays out a number of presidential acts that constitute obstruction of justice including:

- When Trump asked Deputy National Security Adviser KT McFarland to write an untruthful letter to the file, knowing the government would subpoena it.
- When Trump asked Corey Lewandowski to get Mueller fired.
- When Trump asked Don McGahn to get Mueller fired and then to lie about it.
- When Trump asked McGahn to go back to Mueller's team and change his testimony.
- When Trump dangled a pardon in front of Michael Cohen, in order to keep Cohen from testifying against him.

Analysis: 43 mind-boggling lines from Donald Trump's Wisconsin campaign rally

(CNN)President Donald Trump traveled to Wisconsin on Saturday night to rally his supporters, and -- pointedly -- to miss the annual White House Correspondents' Dinner, which he has yet to attend as President.

Trump, continuing a trend of late, made a slew of questionable claims, bashed the media and loudly proclaimed his rightness about, well, everything. I went through the transcript and picked out the most, uh, outstanding, lines from his Green Bay rally. They're below.

THE POINT -- NOW ON YOUTUBE!

In each episode of his weekly YouTube show, Chris Cillizza will delve a little deeper into the surreal world of politics. Click to subscribe!

1. "The strength of our nation is found in the heart of our people, so true."
This is a very common Trump speech pattern. He reads a line from the teleprompter. And because he hasn't read the speech in advance, he responds by agreeing with his own words that he is seeing for the first time with a "so true." And away we go!

2. "We're going to get to the bottom of a lot of things happening in our country."

So true.

3. "And we're now the number one economy anywhere in the world and it's not even close."

This is, generally, true!

4. "By the way, Saturday night, is there anyplace that's more fun than a Trump rally?"

I might be able to think of one or two places. ...

5. "Can you imagine? Sleepy Joe? Crazy Bernie."

Why did Trump suddenly start talking about his potential 2020 opponents? Oh, I have no idea. But the crowd LOVED it.

6. "I think Pocahontas, she's finished, she's out. She's gone. No, when it was found that I had more Indian blood in me than she did."

Trump is referring to Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren with this taunt. And, yes, the crowd LOVED it.

7. "But can you imagine any of these people up here doing what I'm doing? They'd be 200 people show up if they were president. If they were president, nobody would show up."

It's fascinating that Trump understands the job of being president as getting lots of people to show up to rallies.

8. "The people that get it wrong the most are the weather forecasters and the political analysts."

He's not wrong!

9. "People are standing out 24 hours ago, 32 hours ago outside. Who stood out there for 24 hours?"

This comes from the Green Bay Press Gazette: "A line of supporters wound around the Resch Center; some people said they'd waited outside overnight." So true.

10. "We had 69,000 people sign up to come in. What does this place hold? Like 10,000 or 12,000 or whatever. Whatever it holds. We set the record." What record? Also, I have no idea how Trump came up with this 69,000 number. Here's how a local TV affiliate described the crowd: "This was a free event that anyone could attend, but Secret Service detail said only the first 10,000 people are being let into the center."

11. "I don't know what the hell it holds, but we just set the record." According to the internet, the Resch Center holds 10,500 people. But Trump has the record. Bigly.

12. "That's always dangerous. He said, 'Yes, it is, sir.' It's always dangerous. Yes. You ask like, 'No, sir.' I'm dead. They will take -- they will take that answer. That'll be headlines."

Let me translate this for you people who don't speak word salad: Trump brought the owner of the Resch Center onstage and asked if it was a record crowd. (Because that is very important to how he does his job.) The owner said it was a record. Trump was relieved because it would have been bad headlines if it was not a record.

13. "Now, this is the record. We set records everywhere."

It is VERY important for you to know that Donald Trump set a record. VERY.

14. "The greatest political hoax in American history, it really has been." For the record: The Mueller probe resulted in 199 charges against 37 people and entities. Seven people pleaded guilty to a variety of crimes while five were sentenced to prison. So, not really a "hoax."

15. "The USMCA like the song 'YMCA,' right?"

Ladies and gentlemen, the President of the United States!

16. "Can you believe I'm a politician? I can't even."

Honestly, same.

17. "You know, Canada, we love the song, 'Oh Canada.' Let's sing, 'Oh Canada,' right. We love the show."

WHAT. IS. HAPPENING. (And, no, there isn't much context to add here. He just started talking about Canada.)

18. "But who knows, I always say, 'Who knows?' Because who the hell knows?"

[nods head slowly]

19. "Don't forget, we are the piggy bank that everybody is robbing. We're the ones. We're the piggy bank that everybody is stealing from and robbing and taking advantage of."

USA! USA! USA!

20. "This I don't -- I tell you what, you know, people say, 'Oh, he wants to take over the country. He wants to extend.' "

I think Trump is ruling out changing the constitutional limit on a President serving two terms here. So there's that.

21. "You're right, USA. We love USA and that's right."

"I love lamp." -- Brick Tamland

22. "If you look at what's happened with the scum that's leaving the very top of government."

Just the President of the United States referring to top-level staff as "scum." Super normal stuff!!!

23. "The dirty -- these were dirty cops. These were dirty players."

Trump, presumably, is referring to longtime officials at the Department of Justice like James Comey and Robert Mueller.

24. "I mean we're draining the swamp, but are we having a good time or what?"

Who said you can't have fun draining the swamp? Not me!

25. "And look at all those beautiful red hats and some white ones. Some white. Look at that. Those are -- that's a lot of red hats. But you do have the white ones too, right?"

Red MAGA hats > White MAGA hats. But wait....

26. "And you have the black ones, too. You have a lot of them. You have a lot of different hats."

... there's more! SO MANY HATS. OF DIFFERING COLORS.

27. "It's called MAGA country. You know, I didn't hear that term until that third-rate actor in Chicago went out."

The President of the United States offers his thoughts on the Jussie Smollett case.

28. "Ronald Reagan used seldom Let's Make America Great. Close, but not the same. Let's -- apostrophe S. You don't want the apostrophe. It's too complicated. It doesn't work. But Ronald Reagan was good. He said let's make -- but he didn't use it. He used it a little bit. We seriously use it, right?"

OHMYGODOHMYGODOHMYGOD

29. "And MAGA we got for free. Because my whole deal was Make America Great Again, all of a sudden people are saying and going #MAGA."

30. "We have a massive television audience, do you ever see so many cameras? If somebody else were here, you'd have about like none." I've heard that this is a record crowd. So true.

31. "Because I have a couple of friends here. They're pretty wealthy people, very successful people. And you know what? The hell with them. I don't care."

Oh snap, Trump friends, you got dunked on! FACE!

32. "In Michigan, they gave me an award six years, seven years ago, I had no idea. It was the Man of the Year in Michigan."

There's no evidence Trump was ever named "Man of the Year" in Michigan.

33. "They will take your guns away, too, by the way."

Trump passes along this much-debunked notion that Democrats, if put in power, will collect all firearms in the country -- and no one bats an eye.

34. "Now we're sending many of them to sanctuary cities. Thank you very much. They're not too happy about it. I'm proud to tell you that was actually my sick idea."

There's zero evidence that the administration is shipping undocumented immigrants detained at the border to sanctuary cities. In fact, several administration officials have made clear that the policy is not only logistically untenable but also potentially illegal. But, hey, it was Trump's "sick idea"!

35. "To confront the border crisis, I declared a national emergency. The good news is everybody agrees."

[narrator voice]* They don't.

36. "They are aggressively pushing extreme late-term abortion, allowing children to be ripped from their mother's womb."

Totally and completely false.

37. "The baby is born. The mother meets with the doctor. They take care of the baby. They wrap the baby beautifully. And then the doctor and the mother determine whether or not they will execute the baby."

Dangerously inaccurate.

38. "We've got a lot of young people out there. You want to know the truth? I actually think we have more than they do."

Hillary Clinton won voters aged 18-29 by 19 points in 2016.

39. "We're very close, $300 million for the Great Lakes Restoration Initiatives."

False!

40. "You know, a lot of times, if you're not going to brag about it, nobody else is, you might as well do it. True."

So true.

41. "And I have to say, every leader without fail that comes to see me in the Oval Office, they all say congratulations."

Every foreign leader who comes to see Trump tells him "congratulations." Every one. Absolutely. This is definitely, 100% true, I'm sure.

42. "With every last ounce of heart and hope and sweat, and so we are going to make our stand."

Speaking of making stands: Why the hell did Jon Snow approve a battle plan where he marched his forces outside of the walls of Winterfell to battle the army of the dead? Like, why not hang out inside the walls? Am I the only one who thinks this?

43. "Together with the great and proud people of Wisconsin, we will make America wealthy again."

[emoji with cash coming out of mouth] This feels like a good place to end.

Trump slams leaders of 'Dues Sucking firefighters' union after Biden endorsement [trump is so sick, so mentally ill! The question is, who has their backs? Only those as crazy as trump would say trump!]

Mark Steven Domingo, an Army veteran, was arrested Friday night after he took delivery of what he thought was a live bomb from an undercover law enforcement officer posing as a bomb-maker, authorities said. (FBI) A Reseda man planned to detonate improvised explosive devices at several Southern California locations to cause “mass casualties” in a terror plot thwarted by law enforcement officials, authorities said Monday.

Mark Steven Domingo, 26, an Army veteran, was arrested Friday night after he took delivery of what he thought was a live bomb from an undercover law enforcement officer posing as a bomb-maker, officials said. He was charged with attempting to provide material support to terrorists.

According to a federal affidavit, “after considering various attacks — including targeting Jews, churches, and police officers — Domingo decided to detonate an IED at a rally scheduled to take place in Long Beach this past weekend. As part of the plot, Domingo asked his confederate — who actually was cooperating with the FBI as part of the investigation — to find a bomb-maker, and Domingo last week purchased several hundred nails to be used as shrapnel inside the IED.

“Domingo said he specifically bought three-inch nails because they would be long enough to penetrate the human body and puncture internal organs,” the affidavit states.

Prosecutors said Domingo sought retribution for the New Zealand mosques attack and said he was willing to become a martyr.

“There must be retribution,” he said in an online post, according to the federal criminal complaint. He also allegedly expressed allegiance to the Islamic State.

“America needs another vegas event ...[to] give them a taste of the terror they gladly spread all over the world,” Domingo allegedly wrote in reference to the massacre at the Route 91 concert in October 2017.

The FBI saw the posts and used an informant to begin a series of meetings with Domingo. During these discussions, he talked about targeting “Jews, police officers, churches and a military facility,” authorities said. A law enforcement source told The Times he also considered an attack at the Santa Monica Pier.

Domingo talked about a drive-by shooting using an AK-47-style rifle, authorities allege. But officials say he ended up targeting rallies in Long Beach and Huntington Beach. Worried those events might be canceled, he also considered blowing up the Santa Monica Pier, documents show.

The terror plot was uncovered less than 48 hours after a gunman opened fire inside a San Diego County synagogue, killing one woman and wounding several others in what law enforcement officials are investigating as an anti-Semitic hate crime.

Southern California has been the scene of several terrorism plots and attacks, including one by a prison-based group that targeted the U.S. government and supporters of Israel.

In 2005, Kevin James founded Jam’iyyat Ul-Islam Is-Saheeh, or JIS, inside a California prison and led a conspiracy to attack Los Angeles International Airport, several Army recruiting centers and the Israeli Consulate in L.A. The group planned to stage attacks on political targets with the proceeds of gas station robberies, investigators said. Authorities said they learned of the potential plot when Torrance police investigating the robberies found lists of targets and other information at one suspect’s apartment in South Los Angeles.

Three years before that, a gunman killed two people at the busy LAX ticket counter of El Al Israel Airlines.

And in 2015, Syed Rizwan Farook and his wife, Tashfeen Malik, entered a holiday gathering for county employees at the Inland Regional Center in San Bernardino and, using rifles purchased by a friend, killed 14 people and injured 22 others.

Authorities said that Farook and a friend had plotted additional terror attacks targeting students at a nearby community college and drivers on the 91 Freeway.

Andrew Napolitano Calls Out Jared Kushner for 'Deceptive' Effort to 'Diminish' Russian InterferenceThe segment with Bartiromo came after President Trump denounced Napolitano on Saturday, saying the judge had turned nasty because he wasn't appointed to the Supreme Court. "Thank you to brilliant and highly respected attorney Alan Dershowitz for destroying the very dumb legal argument of 'Judge' Andrew Napolitano," Trump tweeted after a Fox News segment. "Ever since Andrew came to my office to ask that I appoint him to the U.S. Supreme Court, and I said NO, he has been very hostile! Also asked for pardon for his friend. A good 'pal' of low ratings Shepard Smith." On set, the judge answered both charges - suggesting the president has mischaracterized the matter. Though Napolitano did confirm that he and Trump did have two separate 90 minute conversations in the immediate weeks after his 2016 election victory. A rep for Fox News did not offer any additional comment on the matter. Also Read: Fox News' Andrew Napolitano Says Mueller Report 'Might Be Enough to Prosecute' Trump Once one of Trump's favorite Fox News personalities, Napolitano has increasingly raised eyebrows on set for his tough commentary on the president's legal woes. On his Fox News digital series, "Judge Napolitano's Chambers," the judge has bluntly called Trump's behavior documented in the Mueller Report as "criminal." "Prosecutors prosecute people who interfere with government functions and that's what the president did by obstruction, where is this going to end? I don't know, but I am disappointed in the behavior of the president," Napolitano said last week. "If he had ordered his aides to violate federal law to save a human life or to preserve human freedom, he would at least have a moral defense to his behavior," he added. "But ordering them to break federal law to save him from the consequences of his own behavior, that is immoral, that is criminal, that is defenseless, that is condemnable." Just days earlier, Napolitano said in a different monologue on the same program that it was his belief there was enough in the report to "prosecute" the president - even though the special counsel declined to do so. Threatens Trump Officials with 'Incarceration' for Refusing to Honor Subpoenas](#) Representative Gerry Connolly (D., Va.), a member of the House Oversight Committee, said Friday that the panel might resort to the threat of incarceration should Trump administration officials continue to ignore its numerous subpoena-backed requests for documents. "We're going to resist, and if a subpoena is issued and you're told you must testify, we will back that up," Connolly told CNN's Wolf Blitzer. "And we will use any and all power in our command to make sure it's backed up - whether that's a contempt citation, whether that's going to court and getting that citation enforced, whether it's fines, whether it's possible incarceration. We will go to the max to enforce the constitutional role of the legislative branch of government." The president and his advisers have said explicitly that they will not yield to Democrats' demands that officials testify before the Oversight Committee regarding the issuance of security clearances, the formation of the so-called zero-tolerance immigration-enforcement policy, and other matters. White House adviser Stephen Miller, former security-clearance official Carl Kline, and John Gore, a deputy assistant attorney general in the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, have thus far all refused to come before the panel. Connolly emphasized in particular the Committee's desire to hear from Miller, whom he called Trump's "immigration whisperer," regarding what measures the administration plans to take to harden the southern border in the wake of Secretary of Homeland Security Kierstjen Nielsen's departure. "We want to hear from him: What is your thinking, what is it you've been advising the president, and where is it you think you're going to be taking us as a country with these kinds of policies and personnel changes?" Connolly said of Miller. [About time someone got tough with these mobsters; after all, trump's used to corrupt cowards who take dives.

THE POINT -- NOW ON YOUTUBE!

I am watching it live and offering key takeaways from the hearing in real time. They're below.

1. Lindsey Graham shows his pro-Trump colors

Graham, the chairman of the Judiciary committee, has stood out over the first two-plus years of Donald Trump's time in the White House for his drastic about-face on the President. The South Carolina senator went from calling Trump a "kook" who was unfit for office during the 2016 GOP primary to being one of the President's biggest advocates and allies in Congress.

Dive deep into the Mueller report

- Read and search the full report
- CNN found 77 instances of lies and false assertions in Mueller's report. Trump told the greatest number
- 77 lies and falsehoods Mueller called out

• What Trump associates told the public vs. what they told Mueller

• 4 times Barr twisted and cherry-picked Mueller's report

Graham kept up his pro-Trump work during his opening statement on Wednesday. He incorrectly said that Mueller asked Barr to make a conclusion about whether or not Trump had obstructed justice in his actions related to the special counsel probe; Mueller did not do that at all -- simply not making a recommendation of his own about Trump and obstruction, noting that the Office of Legal Counsel made clear a sitting president could not be charged. Then Graham turned to a favorite subject of the President: The text messages -- badmouthing Trump -- between then-FBI official Peter Strzok and Lisa Page during the 2016 election. Graham promised an investigation into those text messages as well as into the origins of the FBI's counter-intelligence probe -- up to and including questions about the FISA warrant granted the FBI to surveil Carter Page. As many people on Twitter quickly noted, if name-calling Trump during the 2016 election was a crime, then Graham himself would be in jail right now.

One example from February 2016: "Donald Trump is not a conservative Republican. He's an opportunist. He's not fit to be President of the United States."

2. Barr tries to (re)explain what he was doing with four-page letter

Now that we know that Mueller took issue with the way that Barr described the report in his summary letter on March 24, the AG sought to re-classify what he meant to do with the letter. He compared it to offering a verdict in a trial, with the transcript of the proceedings (the Mueller report) to come out later. Barr said that public interest was such -- and the stakes were so high -- that he felt the need to offer the summary or verdict immediately after receiving the report.

To hear Barr tell it then, what happened with his letter was all a big misunderstanding. ("We were not trying to summarize the report," Barr told the Judiciary committee on Wednesday.) It was never meant to fully categorize the nature of Mueller's investigations, according to Barr; that misunderstanding is why Mueller wasn't thrilled with Barr's letter.

3. Barr blames the media for Mueller's reaction to his letter

Asked what, specifically, Mueller took issue with in his four-page summary letter, Barr said that the special counsel was unhappy with the description of obstruction as it relates to the President; "The press was reading too much into it," Barr said of what he took from the phone conversation with Mueller on March 28.

But that's not at all what Mueller said in the March 27 letter to Barr, which was released Wednesday morning. There's no mention of the media in that letter. In fact, Mueller seems to directly criticize Barr's handling of the letter. Wrote Mueller:

"The summary letter the Department sent to Congress and released to the public late in the afternoon of March 24 did not fully capture the context, nature, and substance of this office's work and conclusions," Mueller wrote. "There is now public confusion about critical aspects of the results of our investigation."

4. The difference between "firing" and "removal for conflict"

Barr tried to thread a very narrow needle in explaining why President Trump telling then White House counsel Don McGahn to get rid of Mueller was not obstruction of justice. Barr claimed that Trump never told McGahn to "fire" Mueller but rather to remove him from his position due to alleged conflicts of interest. The difference, according to Barr? Firing Mueller would eliminate the special counsel while removing Mueller for cause would ensure a new individual would be named to carry on the special counsel investigation. Therefore, no obstruction. That's slicing the onion very, very thinly.

One more thing: In May 2017, the Department of Justice made clear that Mueller had no ethical conflicts and was perfectly capable of overseeing the special counsel investigation. A month later, Trump told McGahn to remove Mueller for conflicts of interest. So, how did Trump not already know that the DOJ had said no such conflicts existed?

5. Barr has "questions" about the origins of the FBI counterintelligence probe

If you blinked, you might have missed this exchange between Graham and Barr:

GRAHAM: "Do you share my concerns about the counterintelligence probe and how it was started?"

BARR: "Yes."

Big deal. Barr's agreement with Graham means that the attorney general is now at odds with both the FBI and the Mueller report, which made clear that the counterintelligence probe began after the Australians approached the US -- following the release on WikiLeaks of hacked emails from the Democratic National Committee -- to tell them that a one-time Trump aide named George Papadopoulos had told an Australian diplomat that the Russians had dirt on Hillary Clinton.

Barr's statement on Wednesday puts him -- or at least potentially puts him -- much more in line with Trump, who has repeatedly claimed that the counterintelligence investigation was based on an opposition research document put together by former British spy Christopher Steele.

(Steele's work was paid for, at times, by the DNC and the Clinton campaign.)

6. Barr won't be apologizing for saying "spying"

Last month, in a Capitol Hill hearing, Barr said that he believed "spying" had occurred on the Trump campaign in 2016. Controversy followed, as national security officials insisted that the AG referring to the legal use of a FISA warrant to surveil Carter Page was deeply irresponsible.

On Wednesday, Barr refused to back down from the use of that word -- insisting that "spying is a good English word that in fact doesn't have synonyms because it is the broadest word incorporating really all forms of covert intelligence collection." Challenged by Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-Rhode Island) as to whether the term "spying" is used commonly in the Department of Justice, Barr retorted: "It's commonly used by me."

7. Try to follow Barr's logic on the Mueller letter

The facts are these: More than a week after Barr received Mueller's letter expressing concern about how the AG's summary letter had characterized the obstruction evidence -- and talked to Mueller on the phone about it -- he appeared before Congress. And he had this exchange with Florida Democratic Rep. Charlie Crist:

CRIST: Reports have emerged recently, General, that members of the special counsel's team are frustrated at some level with the limited information included in your March 24 letter, that it does not adequately or accurately portray the report's findings. Do you know what they are referencing with that?

BARR: No, I don't.

Asked about that moment on Wednesday, Barr explained what looks like willful obfuscation -- basically -- this way: I didn't know what specific "reports" Crist was referring to or who on the special counsel's team he was talking about. Therefore, my answer is accurate.

Which is, well, whoa. Or, better put, it is a hugely legalistic answer to the question of whether Barr misled Crist and the broader country. Common sense dictates that, when asked about whether he was aware of any frustrations from the special counsel regarding his four-page letter, the letter from Mueller -- and their subsequent phone conversation -- would jump immediately to mind

Barr can make a lawyerly argument that he didn't understand what Crist was specifically referring to in his question. But that doesn't pass the smell test.

8. Barr made clear he did not "exonerate" Trump on obstruction

Pressed on his critical decision not to charge Trump with obstructing the Mueller probe, Barr made a bit of news. Here's what he said: "I didn't exonerate. I said that we didn't believe that there was sufficient evidence to establish an obstruction offense."

That's broadly in keeping with how the Mueller report described its own findings on Trump and obstruction, writing this:

"(I)f we had confidence after a thorough investigation of the facts that the President clearly did not commit obstruction of justice, we would so state. Based on the facts and the applicable legal standards, we are unable to reach that judgment. ... Accordingly, while this report does not conclude that the president committed a crime, it also does not exonerate him."

All of that is VERY different than how Trump himself has described the findings of the Mueller report and what Barr decided after reading it. "No Collusion, No Obstruction, Complete and Total EXONERATION. KEEP AMERICA GREAT!," Trump tweeted on March 24.

The key thing to remember here: Not bringing charges is not the same thing as innocence or exoneration.

9. Barr equivocates on White House influence

California Sen. Kamala Harris asked Barr a simple question: Did anyone in the White House ask or suggest that he open an investigation into a person or people?

Barr was taken aback, asking Harris to repeat the question. He then said he wasn't entirely sure what she meant by the word "suggest."

All of that potentially suggests -- ahem -- that someone in the White House has either asked or suggested that Barr and the DOJ look into a matter. Which is interesting, to say the least.

Mark Steven Domingo, an Army veteran, was arrested Friday night after he took delivery of what he thought was a live bomb from an undercover law enforcement officer posing as a bomb-maker, authorities said. (FBI) A Reseda man planned to detonate improvised explosive devices at several Southern California locations to cause “mass casualties” in a terror plot thwarted by law enforcement officials, authorities said Monday.

Mark Steven Domingo, 26, an Army veteran, was arrested Friday night after he took delivery of what he thought was a live bomb from an undercover law enforcement officer posing as a bomb-maker, officials said. He was charged with attempting to provide material support to terrorists.

According to a federal affidavit, “after considering various attacks — including targeting Jews, churches, and police officers — Domingo decided to detonate an IED at a rally scheduled to take place in Long Beach this past weekend. As part of the plot, Domingo asked his confederate — who actually was cooperating with the FBI as part of the investigation — to find a bomb-maker, and Domingo last week purchased several hundred nails to be used as shrapnel inside the IED.

“Domingo said he specifically bought three-inch nails because they would be long enough to penetrate the human body and puncture internal organs,” the affidavit states.

Prosecutors said Domingo sought retribution for the New Zealand mosques attack and said he was willing to become a martyr.

“There must be retribution,” he said in an online post, according to the federal criminal complaint. He also allegedly expressed allegiance to the Islamic State.

“America needs another vegas event ...[to] give them a taste of the terror they gladly spread all over the world,” Domingo allegedly wrote in reference to the massacre at the Route 91 concert in October 2017.

The FBI saw the posts and used an informant to begin a series of meetings with Domingo. During these discussions, he talked about targeting “Jews, police officers, churches and a military facility,” authorities said. A law enforcement source told The Times he also considered an attack at the Santa Monica Pier.

Domingo talked about a drive-by shooting using an AK-47-style rifle, authorities allege. But officials say he ended up targeting rallies in Long Beach and Huntington Beach. Worried those events might be canceled, he also considered blowing up the Santa Monica Pier, documents show.

The terror plot was uncovered less than 48 hours after a gunman opened fire inside a San Diego County synagogue, killing one woman and wounding several others in what law enforcement officials are investigating as an anti-Semitic hate crime.

Southern California has been the scene of several terrorism plots and attacks, including one by a prison-based group that targeted the U.S. government and supporters of Israel.

In 2005, Kevin James founded Jam’iyyat Ul-Islam Is-Saheeh, or JIS, inside a California prison and led a conspiracy to attack Los Angeles International Airport, several Army recruiting centers and the Israeli Consulate in L.A. The group planned to stage attacks on political targets with the proceeds of gas station robberies, investigators said. Authorities said they learned of the potential plot when Torrance police investigating the robberies found lists of targets and other information at one suspect’s apartment in South Los Angeles.

Three years before that, a gunman killed two people at the busy LAX ticket counter of El Al Israel Airlines.

And in 2015, Syed Rizwan Farook and his wife, Tashfeen Malik, entered a holiday gathering for county employees at the Inland Regional Center in San Bernardino and, using rifles purchased by a friend, killed 14 people and injured 22 others.

Authorities said that Farook and a friend had plotted additional terror attacks targeting students at a nearby community college and drivers on the 91 Freeway.

"Thank you to brilliant and highly respected attorney Alan Dershowitz for destroying the very dumb legal argument of 'Judge' Andrew Napolitano," Trump tweeted after a Fox News segment. "Ever since Andrew came to my office to ask that I appoint him to the U.S. Supreme Court, and I said NO, he has been very hostile! Also asked for pardon for his friend. A good 'pal' of low ratings Shepard Smith." On set, the judge answered both charges - suggesting the president has mischaracterized the matter. Though Napolitano did confirm that he and Trump did have two separate 90 minute conversations in the immediate weeks after his 2016 election victory. A rep for Fox News did not offer any additional comment on the matter. Also Read: Fox News' Andrew Napolitano Says Mueller Report 'Might Be Enough to Prosecute' Trump Once one of Trump's favorite Fox News personalities, Napolitano has increasingly raised eyebrows on set for his tough commentary on the president's legal woes. On his Fox News digital series, "Judge Napolitano's Chambers," the judge has bluntly called Trump's behavior documented in the Mueller Report as "criminal." "Prosecutors prosecute people who interfere with government functions and that's what the president did by obstruction, where is this going to end? I don't know, but I am disappointed in the behavior of the president," Napolitano said last week. "If he had ordered his aides to violate federal law to save a human life or to preserve human freedom, he would at least have a moral defense to his behavior," he added. "But ordering them to break federal law to save him from the consequences of his own behavior, that is immoral, that is criminal, that is defenseless, that is condemnable." Just days earlier, Napolitano said in a different monologue on the same program that it was his belief there was enough in the report to "prosecute" the president - even though the special counsel declined to do so. Politics National Review House Dem. Threatens Trump Officials with 'Incarceration' for Refusing to Honor Subpoenas Representative Gerry Connolly (D., Va.), a member of the House Oversight Committee, said Friday that the panel might resort to the threat of incarceration should Trump administration officials continue to ignore its numerous subpoena-backed requests for documents. “We're going to resist, and if a subpoena is issued and you're told you must testify, we will back that up,” Connolly told CNN's Wolf Blitzer. “And we will use any and all power in our

Analysis: 43 mind-boggling lines from Donald Trump's Wisconsin campaign rally [trump is so sick, so mentally ill!]

(CNN)President Donald Trump traveled to Wisconsin on Saturday night to rally his supporters, and -- pointedly -- to miss the annual White House Correspondents' Dinner, which he has yet to attend as President.

Trump, continuing a trend of late, made a slew of questionable claims, bashed the media and loudly proclaimed his rightness about, well, everything. I went through the transcript and picked out the most, uh, outstanding, lines from his Green Bay rally. They're below. THE POINT -- NOW ON YOUTUBE!

1. "The strength of our nation is found in the heart of our people, so true." This is a very common Trump speech pattern. He reads a line from the teleprompter. And because he hasn't read the speech in advance, he responds by agreeing with his own words that he is seeing for the first time with a "so true." And away we go!

2. "We're going to get to the bottom of a lot of things happening in our country."
So true.

3. "And we're now the number one economy anywhere in the world and it's not even close."
This is, generally, true!

4. "By the way, Saturday night, is there anyplace that's more fun than a Trump rally?"

I might be able to think of one or two places. ...

5. "Can you imagine? Sleepy Joe? Crazy Bernie."

Why did Trump suddenly start talking about his potential 2020 opponents? Oh, I have no idea. But the crowd LOVED it.

6. "I think Pocahontas, she's finished, she's out. She's gone. No, when it was found that I had more Indian blood in me than she did."

Trump is referring to Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren with this taunt. And, yes, the crowd LOVED it.

7. "But can you imagine any of these people up here doing what I'm doing? They'd be 200 people show up if they were president. If they were president, nobody would show up."

It's fascinating that Trump understands the job of being president as getting lots of people to show up to rallies.

8. "The people that get it wrong the most are the weather forecasters and the political analysts."

He's not wrong!

9. "People are standing out 24 hours ago, 32 hours ago outside. Who stood out there for 24 hours?"

This comes from the Green Bay Press Gazette: "A line of supporters wound around the Resch Center; some people said they'd waited outside overnight." So true.

10. "We had 69,000 people sign up to come in. What does this place hold? Like 10,000 or 12,000 or whatever. Whatever it holds. We set the record." What record? Also, I have no idea how Trump came up with this 69,000 number. Here's how a local TV affiliate described the crowd: "This was a free event that anyone could attend, but Secret Service detail said only the first 10,000 people are being let into the center."

11. "I don't know what the hell it holds, but we just set the record." According to the internet, the Resch Center holds 10,500 people. But Trump has the record. Big ly.

12. "That's always dangerous. He said, 'Yes, it is, sir.' It's always dangerous. Yes. You ask like, 'No, sir.' I'm dead. They will take -- they will take that answer. That'll be headlines."

Let me translate this for you people who don't speak word salad: Trump brought the owner of the Resch Center onstage and asked if it was a record crowd. (Because that is very important to how he does his job.) The owner said it was a record. Trump was relieved because it would have been bad headlines if it was not a record.

13. "Now, this is the record. We set records everywhere."

It is VERY important for you to know that Donald Trump set a record. VERY.

14. "The greatest political hoax in American history, it really has been." For the record: The Mueller probe resulted in 199 charges against 37 people and entities. Seven people pleaded guilty to a variety of crimes while five were sentenced to prison. So, not really a "hoax."

15. "The USMCA like the song 'YMCA,' right?"

Ladies and gentlemen, the President of the United States!

16. "Can you believe I'm a politician? I can't even."

Honestly, same.

17. "You know, Canada, we love the song, 'Oh Canada.' Let's sing, 'Oh Canada,' right. We love the show."

WHAT. IS. HAPPENING. (And, no, there isn't much context to add here. He just started talking about Canada.)

18. "But who knows, I always say, 'Who knows?' Because who the hell knows?"

[nods head slowly]

19. "Don't forget, we are the piggy bank that everybody is robbing. We're the ones. We're the piggy bank that everybody is stealing from and robbing and taking advantage of."

USA! USA! USA!

20. "This I don't -- I tell you what, you know, people say, 'Oh, he wants to take over the country. He wants to extend.' "

I think Trump is ruling out changing the constitutional limit on a President serving two terms here. So there's that.

21. "You're right, USA. We love USA and that's right."

"I love lamp." -- Brick Tamland

22. "If you look at what's happened with the scum that's leaving the very top of government."

Just the President of the United States referring to top-level staff as "scum." Super normal stuff!!!

23. "The dirty -- these were dirty cops. These were dirty players."

Trump, presumably, is referring to longtime officials at the Department of Justice like James Comey and Robert Mueller.

24. "I mean we're draining the swamp, but are we having a good time or what?"

Who said you can't have fun draining the swamp? Not me!

25. "And look at all those beautiful red hats and some white ones. Some white. Look at that. Those are -- that's a lot of red hats. But you do have the white ones too, right?"

Red MAGA hats > White MAGA hats. But wait....

26. "And you have the black ones, too. You have a lot of them. You have a lot of different hats."

... there's more! SO MANY HATS. OF DIFFERING COLORS.

27. "It's called MAGA country. You know, I didn't hear that term until that third-rate actor in Chicago went out."

The President of the United States offers his thoughts on the Jussie Smollett case.

28. "Ronald Reagan used seldom Let's Make America Great. Close, but not the same. Let's -- apostrophe S. You don't want the apostrophe. It's too complicated. It doesn't work. But Ronald Reagan was good. He said let's make -- but he didn't use it. He used it a little bit. We seriously use it, right?"

OHMYGODOHMYGODOHMYGOD

29. "And MAGA we got for free. Because my whole deal was Make America Great Again, all of a sudden people are saying and going #MAGA."

30. "We have a massive television audience, do you ever see so many cameras? If somebody else were here, you'd have about like none."

I've heard that this is a record crowd. So true.

31. "Because I have a couple of friends here. They're pretty wealthy people, very successful people. And you know what? The hell with them. I don't care."

Oh snap, Trump friends, you got dunked on! FACE!

32. "In Michigan, they gave me an award six years, seven years ago, I had no idea. It was the Man of the Year in Michigan."

There's no evidence Trump was ever named "Man of the Year" in Michigan.

33. "They will take your guns away, too, by the way."

Trump passes along this much-debunked notion that Democrats, if put in power, will collect all firearms in the country -- and no one bats an eye.

34. "Now we're sending many of them to sanctuary cities. Thank you very much. They're not too happy about it. I'm proud to tell you that was actually my sick idea."

There's zero evidence that the administration is shipping undocumented immigrants detained at the border to sanctuary cities. In fact, several administration officials have made clear that the policy is not only logistically untenable but also potentially illegal. But, hey, it was Trump's "sick idea"!

35. "To confront the border crisis, I declared a national emergency. The good news is everybody agrees."

[narrator voice] They don't.

36. "They are aggressively pushing extreme late-term abortion, allowing children to be ripped from their mother's womb."

39. "We're very close, $300 million for the Great Lakes Restoration Initiatives."

False!

40. "You know, a lot of times, if you're not going to brag about it, nobody else is, you might as well do it. True."

So true.

41. "And I have to say, every leader without fail that comes to see me in the Oval Office, they all say congratulations."

Every foreign leader who comes to see Trump tells him "congratulations." Every one. Absolutely. This is definitely, 100% true, I'm sure.

42. "With every last ounce of heart and hope and sweat, and so we are going to make our stand."

Speaking of making stands: Why the hell did Jon Snow approve a battle plan where he marched his forces outside of the walls of Winterfell to

A Reseda man planned to detonate improvised explosive devices at several Southern California locations to cause "mass casualties" in a terror plot thwarted by law enforcement officials, authorities said

Monday. Mark Steven Domingo, 26, an Army veteran, was arrested Friday night after he took delivery of what he thought was a live bomb from an undercover law enforcement officer posing as a bomb-maker, officials said. He was charged with attempting to provide material support to terrorists. According to a federal affidavit, “after considering various attacks — including targeting Jews, churches, and police officers — Domingo decided to detonate an IED at a rally scheduled to take place in Long Beach this past weekend. As part of the plot, Domingo asked his confederate — who actually was cooperating with the FBI as part of the investigation — to find a bomb-maker, and Domingo last week purchased several hundred nails to be used as shrapnel inside the IED. “Domingo said he specifically bought three-inch nails because they would be long enough to penetrate the human body and puncture internal organs,” the affidavit states. Prosecutors said Domingo sought retribution for the New Zealand mosques attack and said he was willing to become a martyr. “There must be retribution,” he said in an online post, according to the federal criminal complaint. He also allegedly expressed allegiance to the Islamic State. “America needs another vegas event ...[to] give them a taste of the terror they gladly spread all over the world,” Domingo allegedly wrote in reference to the massacre at the Route 91 concert in October 2017. The FBI saw the posts and used an informant to begin a series of meetings with Domingo. During these discussions, he talked about targeting “Jews, police officers, churches and a military facility,” authorities said. A law enforcement source told The Times he also considered an attack at the Santa Monica Pier. Domingo talked about a drive-by shooting using an AK-47-style rifle, authorities allege. But officials say he ended up targeting rallies in Long Beach and Huntington Beach. Worried those events might be canceled, he also considered blowing up the Santa Monica Pier, documents show. The terror plot was uncovered less than 48 hours after a gunman opened fire inside a San Diego County synagogue, killing one woman and wounding several others in what law enforcement officials are investigating as an anti-Semitic hate crime. Southern California has been the scene of several terrorism plots and attacks, including one by a prison-based group that targeted the U.S. government and supporters of Israel. In 2005, Kevin James founded Jam'iyyat Ul-Islam Is-Saheeh, or JIS, inside a California prison and led a conspiracy to attack Los Angeles International Airport, several Army recruiting centers and the Israeli Consulate in L.A. The group planned to stage attacks on political targets with the proceeds of gas station robberies, investigators said. Authorities said they learned of the potential plot when Torrance police investigating the robberies found lists of targets and other information at one suspect's apartment in South Los Angeles. Three years before that, a gunman killed two people at the busy LAX ticket counter of El Al Israel Airlines. And in 2015, Syed Rizwan Farook and his wife, Tashfeen Malik, entered a holiday gathering for county employees at the Inland Regional Center in San Bernardino and, using rifles purchased by a friend, killed 14 people and injured 22 others. Authorities said that Farook and a friend had plotted additional terror attacks targeting students at a nearby community college and drivers on the 91 Freeway.

NYMAG.COM MUELLER REPORT CONFIRMS TRUMP RUNS THE WHITE HOUSE LIKE IT'S THE MAFIA

Donald Trump is running the American government like a business – or, if we're being precise, like a criminal enterprise.

The president's penchant for asking himself, "What would Roy Cohn advise John Gotti to do?" has been clear for some time. Last August, Trump said of the possibility that Michael Cohen would cooperate with Robert Mueller's investigation, "I know all about flipping. It should almost be illegal." Around that same time, the president insisted that his White House counsel, Don McGahn, was not a "a John Dean type 'RAT'" — a reference to President Nixon's lawyer, who testified (truthfully) about his boss's attempts to obstruct justice. And Trump has repeatedly argued that the U.S. attorney general's primary responsibility is to demonstrate unflinching loyalty to the president, as though the federal government was the Mafia and Trump its godfather. Thus, Robert Mueller's investigation was never going to reveal that the leader of the free world thinks like a mobster, as that was something we already knew. Nevertheless, the special counsel's report does confirm that fact by detailing three previously unreported instances in which the president's behavior was indistinguishable from that of a mafioso:

The president berated the White House counsel for keeping records on their interactions because “lawyers don’t take notes.”

In June 2017, Trump directed Don McGahn to have Robert Mueller fired. McGahn then let it be known that he would resign before carrying out such an order.

By the following January, the New York Times had gotten wind of that conversation. And when the paper’s story hit newsstands, Trump ordered McGahn to dispute the report. McGahn refused. In a tense Oval Office meeting, Trump further pressured the White House counsel to dispute the Times story — and then asked McGahn about his recent conversations with Mueller’s office. A very mobster-esque exchange ensued:

The President also asked McGahn in the meeting why he had told Special Counsel’s Office investigators that the President had told him to have the Special Counsel removed. McGahn responded that he had to and that his conversations with the President were not protected by attorney-client privilege. The President then asked, “What about these notes? Why do you take notes? Lawyers don’t take notes. I never had a lawyer who took notes.” McGahn responded that he keeps notes because he is a “real lawyer” and explained that notes create a record and are not a bad thing. The President said, “I’ve had a lot of great lawyers, like Roy Cohn. He did not take notes.”

The president once refused to look at evidence of his underlings’ misdeeds lest he end up knowing too much.

In June 2017, Trump learned of the existence of the (now infamous) emails in which his eldest son arranged a meeting with purported Russian operatives at Trump Tower the previous summer (“If it’s what you say I love it”). Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner then tried to fill in the president on documents ostensibly related to that meeting. Trump demurred:

Communications advisors Hope Hicks and Josh Raffel recalled discussing with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump that the emails were damaging and would inevitably be leaked. Hicks and Raffel advised that the best strategy was to proactively release the emails to the press. On or about June 22, 2017, Hicks attended a meeting in the White House residence with the President, Kushner, and Ivanka Trump.

According to Hicks, Kushner said that he wanted to fill the President in on something that had been discovered in the documents he was to provide to the congressional committees involving a meeting with him, Manafort, and Trump Jr. Kushner brought a folder of documents to the meeting and tried to show them to the President, but the President stopped Kushner and said he did not want to know about it, shutting the conversation down. [my emphasis]

After Michael Flynn refused to brief Trump on what he had told federal authorities, Trump's personal lawyer informed Flynn that the president would take note of his "hostility."

In November 2017, Trump's former national security adviser Michael Flynn started cooperating with the special counsel, and withdrew from a joint defense agreement he'd struck with the president. Hours after Trump learned of Flynn's decision, his personal lawyer left a voice-mail for Flynn's counsel:

I understand your situation, but let me see if I can't state it in starker terms ... [I]t wouldn't surprise me if you've gone on to make a deal with ... the government ... [I]f ... there's information that implicates the President, then we've got a national security issue ... so, you know ... we need some kind of heads up. Um, just for the sake of protecting all our interests if we can [R]emember what we've always said about the President and his feelings toward Flynn and that still remains.

Flynn's counsel then informed the president's attorney that it could not provide Trump with such a "heads up." Trump's counsel responded by warning that he would inform the boss of Flynn's "hostility."

Get unlimited access to Intelligencer and everything else New York.

Learn More »

The President's personal counsel said that he interpreted what they said to him as a reflection of Flynn's hostility towards the President and that he planned to inform his client of that interpretation. Flynn's attorneys understood that statement to be an attempt to make them reconsider their position because the President's personal counsel believed that Flynn would be disturbed to know that such a message would be conveyed to the President. [my emphasis]

These anecdotes do not prove that Trump committed obstruction of justice, much less that he participated in a criminal conspiracy with the Russian government. But, assuming that we all agree the American government should not be run like a criminal business, these excerpts alone establish that Congress should not allow Donald Trump to continue being president.

Trump's cognitive deficits seem worse..... he has dementia: Psychologist John Gartner

Susan Edelman Blank "Mitt Romney of Utah called reading Mueller's report "a sobering revelation of how far we have strayed from the aspirations and principles of the founders." "I am sickened at the extent and pervasiveness of dishonesty and misdirection by individuals in the highest office of the land, including the President, I am also appalled that, among other things, fellow citizens working in a campaign for president welcomed help from Russia — including information that had been illegally obtained; that none of them acted to inform American law enforcement; and that the campaign chairman was actively promoting Russian interests in Ukraine."

donny’s poem

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness ..."

"And comes now this hopeless, vicious buffoon, and the audience of equally hopeless and vicious buffoons who laughed and cheered when he made sport of a woman whose lasting memory of the trauma she suffered is the laughter of the perpetrators. Now he comes, a man swathed in scandal, with no interest beyond what he can put in his pocket and what he can put over on a universe of suckers, and he does something like this while occupying an office that we gave him, and while endowed with a public trust that he dishonors every day he wakes up in the White House.

"The scion of a multigenerational criminal enterprise, the parameters of which we are only now beginning to comprehend. A vessel for all the worst elements of the American condition. And a cheap, soulless bully besides. We never have had such a cheap counterfeit of a president* as currently occupies the office. We never have had a president* so completely deserving of scorn and yet so small in the office that it almost seems a waste of time and energy to summon up the requisite contempt.

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness, and who cannot find in himself the decency simply to shut up even when it is in his best interest to do so. Presidents don't have to be heroes to be good presidents. They just have to realize that their humanity is our common humanity and that their political commonwealth is our political commonwealth, too.

Watch him behind the seal of the President of the United States. Isn't he a funny man? Isn't what happened to that lady hilarious? Watch the assembled morons cheer. This is the only story now."

Complaints of judicial misconduct set off an investigation of Judge Maryanne Trump Barry. In retirement, she is no longer subject to the conduct rules. Credit Jonathan Ernst/Reuters

By Russ Buettner and Susanne Craig

April 10, 2019

President Trump's older sister, Maryanne Trump Barry, has retired as a federal appellate judge, ending an investigation into whether she violated judicial conduct rules by participating in fraudulent tax schemes with her siblings.

The court inquiry stemmed from complaints filed last October, after an investigation by The New York Times found that the Trumps had engaged in dubious tax schemes during the 1990s, including instances of outright fraud, that greatly increased the inherited wealth of Mr. Trump and his siblings. Judge Barry not only benefited financially from most of those tax schemes, The Times found; she was also in a position to influence the actions taken by her family.

Judge Barry, now 82, has not heard cases in more than two years but was still listed as an inactive senior judge, one step short of full retirement. In a letter dated Feb. 1, a court official notified the four individuals who had filed the complaints that the investigation was “receiving the full attention” of a judicial conduct council. Ten days later, Judge Barry filed her retirement papers.

The status change rendered the investigation moot, since retired judges are not subject to the conduct rules. The people who filed the complaints were notified last week that the matter had been dropped without a finding on the merits of the allegations. The decision has not yet been made public, but copies were provided to The Times by two of the complainants. Both are involved in the legal profession.

Judge Barry did not respond to emails or telephone messages left at her Manhattan apartment.

Judicial council reviews can result in the censure or reprimand of federal judges, and in extremely rare cases, a referral to the House of Representatives for impeachment.

In retirement, Judge Barry is entitled to receive annually the salary she earned when she last met certain workload requirements. Though the exact figure was not immediately available, it appears to be between $184,500 and $217,600.

The Times investigation focused on how the profits and ownership of the real estate empire built by the president’s father, Fred C. Trump, were transferred to Donald J. Trump and his siblings, often in ways designed to dodge gift and estate taxes.

A lawyer for the president, Charles J. Harder, said last fall, “The New York Times’s allegations of fraud and tax evasion are 100 percent false, and highly defamatory.”

Judge Barry had been a co-owner of a shell company — All County Building Supply & Maintenance — created by the family to siphon cash from their father’s empire by marking up purchases already made by his employees, The Times investigation found. Judge Barry, her siblings and a cousin split the markup, free of gift and estate taxes, which at the time were levied at a much higher rate than income taxes.

Video

2:04How the Trumps Held On to Generational Wealth

By the end of 1997, Donald Trump and his siblings owned nearly all of Fred Trump's empire, free and clear of estate taxes. How did they do it? A special type of trust with a clunky acronym: GRAT, short for grantor-retained annuity trust. It is one of the tax code's great gifts to the ultrawealthy.

On a financial disclosure form filed in 1999, Judge Barry noted that her share of the All County profits for the previous 17 months totaled just over $1 million.

The family also used the padded invoices to justify higher rent increases in rent-regulated buildings, artificially inflating the rents of thousands of tenants. Former prosecutors told The Times that if the authorities had discovered at the time how the Trumps were using All County, their actions would have warranted a criminal investigation for defrauding tenants, tax fraud and filing false documents.

Similarly, Judge Barry benefited from the gross undervaluation of her father's properties when she and her siblings took ownership of them through a trust, sparing them from paying tens of millions of dollars in taxes, The Times found. For years, she attended regular briefings at her brother's offices in Trump Tower to hear updates on the real estate portfolio and to collect her share of the profits. When the siblings sold off their father's empire, between 2004 and 2006, her share of the windfall was $182.5 million, The Times found.

Judge Barry was nominated to the Federal District Court in New Jersey by President Ronald Reagan in 1983, after several years as a federal prosecutor. She was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by President Bill Clinton in 1999.

In February 2017, shortly after her brother's inauguration, she notified the court that she would stop hearing cases and give up her staff and chambers. She was then considered a senior inactive judge, a status that did not entitle her to salary increases, but that left her still subject to conduct inquiries. Judge Barry did not announce a reason for the change at the time.

Following confidentiality requirements, Judge Barry's name does not appear on the order ending the investigation or the correspondence with the complainants. The order identifies the judge in question as a senior inactive judge, about whom complaints were filed in October 2018. Under court rules, all complaints are reviewed by a judge, and those with an allegation of misconduct or disability are generally referred to a panel of judges for investigation.

AMERICA'S A TOTAL FRAUD!

Trump says his father was born in Germany. He was not. While talking to the press in the Oval Office, President Trump incorrectly said his father was born in Germany. The president's father, Fred Trump, was born in New York City in 1905. This is not the first time Trump incorrectly stated where his father was born. Operation Paperclip was the codename under which the US intelligence and military services extricated scientists from Germany, during and after the final stages of World War II. The project was originally called Operation Overcast, and is sometimes also known as Project Paperclip.

Robin Alperstein wrote:

Two things are happening simultaneously in front of our eyes, and they are interconnected, terrifying, and enraging.

The first is that Trump is unraveling, becoming more unhinged and erratic almost by the day. He is in open cognitive decline. You don't have to be a shrink or neuropsychologist to see it. That cognitive decline -- which is occurring under a microscope before a world audience of billions -- would be scary and destabilizing enough on its own; but married to the character traits of a sociopath, it is incredibly dangerous. The rage and lack of capacity, the flailing, the insults, the paranoia, the self-aggrandizement, the raw hatred, the lies, the attacks on others, the rejection of truth and attacks on the most basic of democratic institutions, the vindictiveness and pettiness, the frothing obsession over his own illegitimacy....These are all getting worse and worse, in plain sight.

The second is that the GOP has coalesced further around Trump and even those who some of us thought were "reachable" are doubling down in support of his assaults on fundamental precepts required for our country to function as a democratic state. In some ways this is, of course, a continuation of the Reagan/Bush projects, of Newt Gingrich, and of Mitch McConnell's rejection of democracy when Obama was elected. But still there was some residual hope or belief that at least some of these GOP Congress people would act to preserve the Congress as a co-equal branch of government, abide by the Constitution, protect this country from foreign enemies and influence, repel fascism, and reject the forces of darkness that are rising across Europe, South America, and elsewhere.

But as Trump's depredations and Constitutional violations and lies have increased and worsened, as the devolution continues, and our norms are shattered with impunity, the GOP has not said "no." It has not said "enough is enough." There is no McCarthy moment that is going to happen.

And no matter how unhinged, how patently unfit, how incompetent, how erratic, how vile, how cruel, how dangerous, or how criminal Trump's conduct appears to be, they will close their ranks and defend him. They will support Barr's cover-up and declare "Mission Accomplished"; they will defend ripping children from their parents' arms; they will support his dismantling of the FBI's domestic terrorism unit even as Trump inspires such terrorists at home and abroad; they will fight against the Violence Against Women Act as they support an admitted and accused sexual assaulter and seek to strip women of any control over their own bodies and lives; they will rubber-stamp religious fanatics and extremists whose views are rejected by 80% of Americans into lifelong positions from which they can tyrannize the rest of the country; they will sabotage any and all efforts to protect the planet; they will refuse to bring to a vote critical reforms necessary to remove the pernicious and undemocratic influence of big money and corporations and foreigners from our elections; they will not protect our voting machines and will continue to actively prevent people from voting; they will let critical appointments go unfilled or staffed by corrupt stooges that Putin would salivate over.

And they will gaslight us all and pretend this is normal; they will attack Democrats as "partisans" for daring to believe that a monster like Trump should not be above the law; that it is fine to let his unqualified children into the government and have security clearances over everyone's objection; they will refuse to permit or join in necessary examination into the ways in which the Trump crime family's business interests now substitute for foreign policy.

And no matter how insane he acts, no matter how he treats everyone but his cult as an enemy to be attacked rather than as citizens whom he has a Constitutional obligation to protect, the worse he behaves, it is clear there will be no 25th Amendment solution. They will defend his cognition just as they defend his attacks on children, the Democrats, women, POC, immigrants, the LGBTQIA community, the disabled, the press, and truth. They will lie for him, they will cheat for him, because he is them and they are him. And they will do everything in their power to ensure that Trump and his family are never held accountable. And mocking Trump for saying "oranges" instead of "origins" isn't funny -- he is losing his ability to speak because he has dementia. But you'll never hear the GOP admit that.

Things were bad before but they are getting worse because Trump is emboldened, and so is his party. The government is run by monsters like Stephen Miller, a creature so debased and straight out of central casting he is practically a mirage, and by corrupt arrogant bastards like Mnuchin and Ross and McConnell, and by lickspittles like Graham and Barr and Pence whose servile prostration before Trump would be comical were it not so nauseating and dangerous. Not one has a shred of integrity; not one puts the Constitution or the country first.

I see a lot of people turning away in disgust from the news, from Twitter, from FB, from conversation, and, also from ACTION. I see fear and despair. And so much exhaustion.

I share these feelings. This past week, with Barr's testimony and the state-level efforts to criminalize abortion and the disrespect of Mnuchin for Waters and the rank imbecility of that moronic rep toward John Kerry and the attacks on Schiff and the odious criminal Netanyahu's re-election, I have wanted to disappear or close my eyes or just pretend this is not our world.

But it is. And it can get far worse; that is what the GOP across the country with Trump at its helm is trying to do. It is going to continue to get worse and there is no easy fix for our broken political system.

We have two choices. Fight; or give up and let them win.

Fighting doesn't guarantee our victory. But giving up guarantees theirs.

I am deeply conscious of the privilege that lets me feel that I am "fighting" -- I can physically and financially show up in ways that many others can't. But yet I don't do nearly enough; nothing I do is ever enough; nothing can ever be enough. And sometimes it feels futile and hopeless, and I don't think "the need for self-care" is a good enough excuse for not doing more. I know I need to do more. And when I am tired I think about how I will feel when things get even worse if I did nothing to try to stop it. When my children or grandchildren ask me, "what did you do to stop Trump?" at least I will have a decent answer for them. I will have a list.

And I think that if we all recognize that there are no saviors, no magic, easy fixes, no clean cure for the GOP's rot or its supporters' racism and misogyny or just pure unadulterated selfishness, if we just recognize that each of us has it in us to do something, something more than just vote, and maybe to find a single project to work on to support NOW, not a year from now, not six weeks before the election, not the weekend before the elections, but now, this year, and all year long, we will be able to save ourselves the way we started to in 2018. But our odds will be worse; Trump and the GOP will be further entrenched in their descent into fascism, and their assaults on democracy will be even further normalized. They push back and fight against every gain we make, they obstruct all progress. This is not a one-off fight. And it sucks. We should not have to fight all the time, all the time, for decency, or for our lives. But this is how the marginalized in this country have lived their lives, always: assaulted, gaslighted, fighting to take up space, to be allowed autonomy, to count. This is what BLM is about. Trump and the GOP have made it crystal clear that, in fact, very few lives matter to them; and most of those lives are rich and white and male and straight and donate to the GOP.

Many of us are not used to living this way. It's a horrible way to live, but people adapt, don't they? They become inured or they fight. Or both.

I refuse to become inured. I hope you will do the same.

Susan Edelman Blank AUTHORS OF THE DANGEROUS CASE OF DONALD TRUMP TO RELEASE MENTAL HEALTH ANALYSIS OF MUELLER REPORT

If One is Too Incompetent to Commit a Crime, Despite Trying Hard, Is One Competent to be President?

The Mueller Report may not have enough to indict a president, but it is a document of extraordinary evidence on mental incapacity

Washington, DC, April 25, 2019 — Leading psychiatrists, psychologists, and mental health experts have released a “report on the Mueller report, ”highlighting its extensive documentation of Donald Trump’s psychological characteristics that point to dangerousness and incapacity to serve in his office. Beyond previous reports of actions and statements, the Mueller report shows the more compelling patterns of impulsivity, recklessness, a lack of firm grip on reality, manipulation of advisors, absorption in self-interest that overrides national interest, inability to consider consequences before taking action, paranoid reactions, an attraction to violence, and an absence of empathy, as well as apparent cognitive and memory difficulties. Without diagnosing, these make the President clearly a danger in his role as Commander in Chief and one on whom the world relies for steady and wise actions in international affairs.

We are among the 37 mental health experts, including some of the most renowned psychiatrists and psychologists in the country, who put their analysis in the bestselling book, The Dangerous Case of Donald Trump. An April 2017 conference at Yale School of Medicine, organized by Yale professor Bandy X. Lee clarified the responsibility of mental health professionals to society to point out dangers in our midst and to share their expertise in helping the public to recognize and address those dangers. That conference led to two editions of this public-service book and the World Mental Health Coalition (dangerouscase.org), an organization of thousands of mental health professionals who have joined together to step up in addressing the dangers posed by the president.

Now, the Mueller report brings new evidence as well as confirmation of the evidence on which we based our assessment two years ago. As detailed in the document released today, the Mueller report further confirms the reasons why we believed that the president’s condition was severe and would only grow worse over time in his current position.

Seldom do mental health professionals have the quantity of detailed information the Mueller report provides of an individual's behavior, verified with the caliber of a criminal investigation of the highest order. Now, we can state with a high level of confidence, based on data that vastly exceed what we ordinarily have in clinical practice, that the evidence of the president's mental incapacity is overwhelming.

In the interest of making a reasonable attempt to obtain a personal interview, we request that the president sit through a formal evaluation by a panel of independent experts, which the President should be able to agree to if he believes he is fit to serve. We request that he agree to do so within three weeks. We believe that, given the enormous high-quality data now available, and the extreme dangers implied in presidential incapacity, it is imperative that the president clarify the matter of incapacity through a thorough examination. In the event of refusal, we believe that we have enough evidence to come to a conclusion and will pursue this in the ensuing weeks.

'Obstruction of justice-the statute making obstruction criminal-prohibits interfering, or attempting to interfere, with a criminal prosecution or an investigation the government's conducting' Napolitano said. The Mueller Report, Napolitano believes, lays out a number of presidential acts that constitute obstruction of justice including:

- When Trump asked Deputy National Security Adviser KT McFarland to write an untruthful letter to the file, knowing the government would subpoena it.
- When Trump asked Corey Lewandowski to get Mueller fired.
- When Trump asked Don McGahn to get Mueller fired and then to lie about it.
- When Trump asked McGahn to go back to Mueller's team and change his testimony.
- When Trump dangled a pardon in front of Michael Cohen, in order to keep Cohen from testifying against him.

Key takeaways from Barr's testimony

Analysis The attorney general testified about his handling of the 448-page Mueller report in front of the Senate Judiciary Committee. These were some of the biggest revelations.

(CNN)In the wake of a bombshell revelation that special counsel Robert Mueller took issue with the way William Barr described his Russia probe's findings, the attorney general came to Capitol Hill to testify about his handling of the 448-page Mueller report in front of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

THE POINT -- NOW ON YOUTUBE!

I am watching it live and offering key takeaways from the hearing in real time. They're below.

1. Lindsey Graham shows his pro-Trump colors

Graham, the chairman of the Judiciary committee, has stood out over the first two-plus years of Donald Trump's time in the White House for his drastic about-face on the President. The South Carolina senator went from calling Trump a "kook" who was unfit for office during the 2016 GOP primary to being one of the President's biggest advocates and allies in Congress.

Dive deep into the Mueller report

- Read and search the full report
- CNN found 77 instances of lies and false assertions in Mueller's report. Trump told the greatest number
- 77 lies and falsehoods Mueller called out
- What Trump associates told the public vs. what they told Mueller
- 4 times Barr twisted and cherry-picked Mueller's report

Graham kept up his pro-Trump work during his opening statement on Wednesday. He incorrectly said that Mueller asked Barr to make a conclusion about whether or not Trump had obstructed justice in his actions related to the special counsel probe; Mueller did not do that at all -- simply not making a recommendation of his own about Trump and obstruction, noting that the Office of Legal Counsel made clear a sitting president could not be charged. Then Graham turned to a favorite subject of the President: The text messages -- badmouthing Trump -- between then-FBI official Peter Strzok and Lisa Page during the 2016 election. Graham promised an investigation into those text messages as well as into the origins of the FBI's counter-intelligence probe -- up to and including questions about the FISA warrant granted the FBI to surveil Carter Page. As many people on Twitter quickly noted, if name-calling Trump during the 2016 election was a crime, then Graham himself would be in jail right now.

One example from February 2016: "Donald Trump is not a conservative Republican. He's an opportunist. He's not fit to be President of the United States."

2. Barr tries to (re)explain what he was doing with four-page letter

Now that we know that Mueller took issue with the way that Barr described the report in his summary letter on March 24, the AG sought to re-classify what he meant to do with the letter. He compared it to offering a verdict in a trial, with the transcript of the proceedings (the Mueller report) to come out later. Barr said that public interest was such -- and the stakes were so high -- that he felt the need to offer the summary or verdict immediately after receiving the report.

To hear Barr tell it then, what happened with his letter was all a big misunderstanding. ("We were not trying to summarize the report," Barr told the Judiciary committee on Wednesday.) It was never meant to fully categorize the nature of Mueller's investigations, according to Barr; that misunderstanding is why Mueller wasn't thrilled with Barr's letter.

3. Barr blames the media for Mueller's reaction to his letter

Asked what, specifically, Mueller took issue with in his four-page summary letter, Barr said that the special counsel was unhappy with the description of obstruction as it relates to the President; "The press was reading too much into it," Barr said of what he took from the phone conversation with Mueller on March 28.

But that's not at all what Mueller said in the March 27 letter to Barr, which was released Wednesday morning. There's no mention of the media in that letter. In fact, Mueller seems to directly criticize Barr's handling of the letter. Wrote Mueller:

"The summary letter the Department sent to Congress and released to the public late in the afternoon of March 24 did not fully capture the context, nature, and substance of this office's work and conclusions," Mueller wrote. "There is now public confusion about critical aspects of the results of our investigation."

4. The difference between "firing" and "removal for conflict"

Barr tried to thread a very narrow needle in explaining why President Trump telling then White House counsel Don McGahn to get rid of Mueller was not obstruction of justice. Barr claimed that Trump never told McGahn to "fire" Mueller but rather to remove him from his position due to alleged conflicts of interest. The difference, according to Barr? Firing Mueller would eliminate the special counsel while removing Mueller for cause would ensure a new individual would be named to carry on the special counsel investigation. Therefore, no obstruction. That's slicing the onion very, very thinly.

One more thing: In May 2017, the Department of Justice made clear that Mueller had no ethical conflicts and was perfectly capable of overseeing the special counsel investigation. A month later, Trump told McGahn to remove Mueller for conflicts of interest. So, how did Trump not already know that the DOJ had said no such conflicts existed?

5. Barr has "questions" about the origins of the FBI counterintelligence probe

If you blinked, you might have missed this exchange between Graham and Barr:

GRAHAM: "Do you share my concerns about the counterintelligence probe and how it was started?"

BARR: "Yes."

Big deal. Barr's agreement with Graham means that the attorney general is now at odds with both the FBI and the Mueller report, which made clear that the counterintelligence probe began after the Australians approached the US -- following the release on WikiLeaks of hacked emails from the Democratic National Committee -- to tell them that a one-time Trump aide named George Papadopoulos had told an Australian diplomat that the Russians had dirt on Hillary Clinton.

Barr's statement on Wednesday puts him -- or at least potentially puts him -- much more in line with Trump, who has repeatedly claimed that the counterintelligence investigation was based on an opposition research document put together by former British spy Christopher Steele.

(Steele's work was paid for, at times, by the DNC and the Clinton campaign.)

6. Barr won't be apologizing for saying "spying"

Last month, in a Capitol Hill hearing, Barr said that he believed "spying" had occurred on the Trump campaign in 2016. Controversy followed, as national security officials insisted that the AG referring to the legal use of a FISA warrant to surveil Carter Page was deeply irresponsible.

On Wednesday, Barr refused to back down from the use of that word -- insisting that "spying is a good English word that in fact doesn't have synonyms because it is the broadest word incorporating really all forms of covert intelligence collection." Challenged by Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-Rhode Island) as to whether the term "spying" is used commonly in the Department of Justice, Barr retorted: "It's commonly used by me."

7. Try to follow Barr's logic on the Mueller letter

The facts are these: More than a week after Barr received Mueller's letter expressing concern about how the AG's summary letter had characterized the obstruction evidence -- and talked to Mueller on the phone about it -- he appeared before Congress. And he had this exchange with Florida Democratic Rep. Charlie Crist:

CRIST: Reports have emerged recently, General, that members of the special counsel's team are frustrated at some level with the limited information included in your March 24 letter, that it does not adequately or accurately portray the report's findings. Do you know what they are referencing with that?

BARR: No, I don't.

Asked about that moment on Wednesday, Barr explained what looks like willful obfuscation -- basically -- this way: I didn't know what specific "reports" Crist was referring to or who on the special counsel's team he was talking about. Therefore, my answer is accurate.

Which is, well, whoa. Or, better put, it is a hugely legalistic answer to the question of whether Barr misled Crist and the broader country. Common sense dictates that, when asked about whether he was aware of any frustrations from the special counsel regarding his four-page letter, the letter from Mueller -- and their subsequent phone conversation -- would jump immediately to mind

Barr can make a lawyerly argument that he didn't understand what Crist was specifically referring to in his question. But that doesn't pass the smell test.

8. Barr made clear he did not "exonerate" Trump on obstruction

Pressed on his critical decision not to charge Trump with obstructing the Mueller probe, Barr made a bit of news. Here's what he said: "I didn't exonerate. I said that we didn't believe that there was sufficient evidence to establish an obstruction offense."

That's broadly in keeping with how the Mueller report described its own findings on Trump and obstruction, writing this:

"(I) f we had confidence after a thorough investigation of the facts that the President clearly did not commit obstruction of justice, we would so state. Based on the facts and the applicable legal standards, we are unable to reach that judgment. ... Accordingly, while this report does not conclude that the president committed a crime, it also does not exonerate him."

All of that is VERY different than how Trump himself has described the findings of the Mueller report and what Barr decided after reading it. "No Collusion, No Obstruction, Complete and Total EXONERATION. KEEP AMERICA GREAT!," Trump tweeted on March 24.

The key thing to remember here: Not bringing charges is not the same thing as innocence or exoneration.

9. Barr equivocates on White House influence

California Sen. Kamala Harris asked Barr a simple question: Did anyone in the White House ask or suggest that he open an investigation into a person or people?

Barr was taken aback, asking Harris to repeat the question. He then said he wasn't entirely sure what she meant by the word "suggest."

All of that potentially suggests -- ahem -- that someone in the White House has either asked or suggested that Barr and the DOJ look into a matter. Which is interesting, to say the least.

Mark Steven Domingo, an Army veteran, was arrested Friday night after he took delivery of what he thought was a live bomb from an undercover law enforcement officer posing as a bomb-maker, authorities said. (FBI) A Reseda man planned to detonate improvised explosive devices at several Southern California locations to cause “mass casualties” in a terror plot thwarted by law enforcement officials, authorities said Monday.

Mark Steven Domingo, 26, an Army veteran, was arrested Friday night after he took delivery of what he thought was a live bomb from an undercover law enforcement officer posing as a bomb-maker, officials said. He was charged with attempting to provide material support to terrorists.

According to a federal affidavit, “after considering various attacks — including targeting Jews, churches, and police officers — Domingo decided to detonate an IED at a rally scheduled to take place in Long Beach this past weekend. As part of the plot, Domingo asked his confederate — who actually was cooperating with the FBI as part of the investigation — to find a bomb-maker, and Domingo last week purchased several hundred nails to be used as shrapnel inside the IED.

“Domingo said he specifically bought three-inch nails because they would be long enough to penetrate the human body and puncture internal organs,” the affidavit states.

Prosecutors said Domingo sought retribution for the New Zealand mosques attack and said he was willing to become a martyr.

“There must be retribution,” he said in an online post, according to the federal criminal complaint. He also allegedly expressed allegiance to the Islamic State.

“America needs another vegas event ...[to] give them a taste of the terror they gladly spread all over the world,” Domingo allegedly wrote in reference to the massacre at the Route 91 concert in October 2017.

The FBI saw the posts and used an informant to begin a series of meetings with Domingo. During these discussions, he talked about targeting “Jews, police officers, churches and a military facility,” authorities said. A law enforcement source told The Times he also considered an attack at the Santa Monica Pier.

Domingo talked about a drive-by shooting using an AK-47-style rifle, authorities allege. But officials say he ended up targeting rallies in Long Beach and Huntington Beach. Worried those events might be canceled, he also considered blowing up the Santa Monica Pier, documents show.

The terror plot was uncovered less than 48 hours after a gunman opened fire inside a San Diego County synagogue, killing one woman and wounding several others in what law enforcement officials are investigating as an anti-Semitic hate crime.

Southern California has been the scene of several terrorism plots and attacks, including one by a prison-based group that targeted the U.S. government and supporters of Israel.

In 2005, Kevin James founded Jam’iyyat Ul-Islam Is-Saheeh, or JIS, inside a California prison and led a conspiracy to attack Los Angeles International Airport, several Army recruiting centers and the Israeli Consulate in L.A. The group planned to stage attacks on political targets with the proceeds of gas station robberies, investigators said. Authorities said they learned of the potential plot when Torrance police investigating the robberies found lists of targets and other information at one suspect’s apartment in South Los Angeles.

Three years before that, a gunman killed two people at the busy LAX ticket counter of El Al Israel Airlines.

And in 2015, Syed Rizwan Farook and his wife, Tashfeen Malik, entered a holiday gathering for county employees at the Inland Regional Center in San Bernardino and, using rifles purchased by a friend, killed 14 people and injured 22 others.

Authorities said that Farook and a friend had plotted additional terror attacks targeting students at a nearby community college and drivers on the 91 Freeway.

Andrew Napolitano Calls Out Jared Kushner for 'Deceptive' Effort to 'Diminish' Russian InterferenceThe segment with Bartiromo came after President Trump denounced Napolitano on Saturday, saying the judge had turned nasty because he wasn't appointed to the Supreme Court. "Thank you to brilliant and highly respected attorney Alan Dershowitz for destroying the very dumb legal argument of 'Judge' Andrew Napolitano," Trump tweeted after a Fox News segment. "Ever since Andrew came to my office to ask that I appoint him to the U.S. Supreme Court, and I said NO, he has been very hostile! Also asked for pardon for his friend. A good 'pal' of low ratings Shepard Smith." On set, the judge answered both charges - suggesting the president has mischaracterized the matter. Though Napolitano did confirm that he and Trump did have two separate 90 minute conversations in the immediate weeks after his 2016 election victory. A rep for Fox News did not offer any additional comment on the matter. Also Read: Fox News' Andrew Napolitano Says Mueller Report 'Might Be Enough to Prosecute' Trump Once one of Trump's favorite Fox News personalities, Napolitano has increasingly raised eyebrows on set for his tough commentary on the president's legal woes. On his Fox News digital series, "Judge Napolitano's Chambers," the judge has bluntly called Trump's behavior documented in the Mueller Report as "criminal." "Prosecutors prosecute people who interfere with government functions and that's what the president did by obstruction, where is this going to end? I don't know, but I am disappointed in the behavior of the president," Napolitano said last week. "If he had ordered his aides to violate federal law to save a human life or to preserve human freedom, he would at least have a moral defense to his behavior," he added. "But ordering them to break federal law to save him from the consequences of his own behavior, that is immoral, that is criminal, that is defenseless, that is condemnable." Just days earlier, Napolitano said in a different monologue on the same program that it was his belief there was enough in the report to "prosecute" the president - even though the special counsel declined to do so. Trump has made 10,000 untrue claims as president, factcheckers say Donald Trump has made more than 10,000 false or misleading claims since he became president in January 2017, according to a count by factcheckers at the Washington Post. Trump's strike rate of “alternative facts” – a phrase made infamous by senior adviser Kellyanne Conway – has increased rapidly in recent months, the paper said on Monday. The distinct worsening of the problem coincided with the publication of special counsel Robert Mueller's report on Russian election interference, a partial government shutdown over border wall funding and a series of freewheeling campaign rallies during the midterm elections.

[Analysis: 43 mind-boggling lines from Donald Trump's Wisconsin campaign rally \[trump is so sick, so mentally ill! \]](#)

(CNN)President Donald Trump traveled to Wisconsin on Saturday night to rally his supporters, and -- pointedly -- to miss the annual White House Correspondents' Dinner, which he has yet to attend as President.

Trump, continuing a trend of late, made a slew of questionable claims, bashed the media and loudly proclaimed his rightness about, well, everything. I went through the transcript and picked out the most, uh, outstanding, lines from his Green Bay rally. They're below. THE POINT -- NOW ON YOUTUBE!

1. "The strength of our nation is found in the heart of our people, so true." This is a very common Trump speech pattern. He reads a line from the teleprompter. And because he hasn't read the speech in advance, he responds by agreeing with his own words that he is seeing for the first time with a "so true." And away we go!

2. "We're going to get to the bottom of a lot of things happening in our country."
So true.

3. "And we're now the number one economy anywhere in the world and it's not even close."
This is, generally, true!

4. "By the way, Saturday night, is there anyplace that's more fun than a Trump rally?"
I might be able to think of one or two places. ...

5. "Can you imagine? Sleepy Joe? Crazy Bernie."
Why did Trump suddenly start talking about his potential 2020 opponents? Oh, I have no idea. But the crowd LOVED it.

6. "I think Pocahontas, she's finished, she's out. She's gone. No, when it was found that I had more Indian blood in me than she did."
Trump is referring to Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren with this taunt. And, yes, the crowd LOVED it.

7. "But can you imagine any of these people up here doing what I'm doing? They'd be 200 people show up if they were president. If they were president, nobody would show up."

It's fascinating that Trump understands the job of being president as getting lots of people to show up to rallies.

8. "The people that get it wrong the most are the weather forecasters and the political analysts."

He's not wrong!

9. "People are standing out 24 hours ago, 32 hours ago outside. Who stood out there for 24 hours?"

This comes from the Green Bay Press Gazette: "A line of supporters wound around the Resch Center; some people said they'd waited outside overnight." So true.

10. "We had 69,000 people sign up to come in. What does this place hold? Like 10,000 or 12,000 or whatever. Whatever it holds. We set the record." What record? Also, I have no idea how Trump came up with this 69,000 number. Here's how a local TV affiliate described the crowd: "This was a free event that anyone could attend, but Secret Service detail said only the first 10,000 people are being let into the center."

11. "I don't know what the hell it holds, but we just set the record." According to the internet, the Resch Center holds 10,500 people. But Trump has the record. Big ly.

12. "That's always dangerous. He said, 'Yes, it is, sir.' It's always dangerous. Yes. You ask like, 'No, sir.' I'm dead. They will take -- they will take that answer. That'll be headlines."

Let me translate this for you people who don't speak word salad: Trump brought the owner of the Resch Center onstage and asked if it was a record crowd. (Because that is very important to how he does his job.) The owner said it was a record. Trump was relieved because it would have been bad headlines if it was not a record.

13. "Now, this is the record. We set records everywhere."

It is VERY important for you to know that Donald Trump set a record. VERY.

14. "The greatest political hoax in American history, it really has been." For the record: The Mueller probe resulted in 199 charges against 37 people and entities. Seven people pleaded guilty to a variety of crimes while five were sentenced to prison. So, not really a "hoax."

15. "The USMCA like the song 'YMCA,' right?"

Ladies and gentlemen, the President of the United States!

16. "Can you believe I'm a politician? I can't even."

Honestly, same.

17. "You know, Canada, we love the song, 'Oh Canada.' Let's sing, 'Oh Canada,' right. We love the show."

WHAT. IS. HAPPENING. (And, no, there isn't much context to add here. He just started talking about Canada.)

18. "But who knows, I always say, 'Who knows?' Because who the hell knows?"

[nods head slowly]

19. "Don't forget, we are the piggy bank that everybody is robbing. We're the ones. We're the piggy bank that everybody is stealing from and robbing and taking advantage of."

USA! USA! USA!

20. "This I don't -- I tell you what, you know, people say, 'Oh, he wants to take over the country. He wants to extend.' "

I think Trump is ruling out changing the constitutional limit on a President serving two terms here. So there's that.

21. "You're right, USA. We love USA and that's right."

"I love lamp." -- Brick Tamland

22. "If you look at what's happened with the scum that's leaving the very top of government."

Just the President of the United States referring to top-level staff as "scum." Super normal stuff!!!

23. "The dirty -- these were dirty cops. These were dirty players."

Trump, presumably, is referring to longtime officials at the Department of Justice like James Comey and Robert Mueller.

24. "I mean we're draining the swamp, but are we having a good time or what?"

Who said you can't have fun draining the swamp? Not me!

25. "And look at all those beautiful red hats and some white ones. Some white. Look at that. Those are -- that's a lot of red hats. But you do have the white ones too, right?"

Red MAGA hats > White MAGA hats. But wait....

26. "And you have the black ones, too. You have a lot of them. You have a lot of different hats."

... there's more! SO MANY HATS. OF DIFFERING COLORS.

27. "It's called MAGA country. You know, I didn't hear that term until that third-rate actor in Chicago went out."

The President of the United States offers his thoughts on the Jussie Smollett case.

28. "Ronald Reagan used seldom Let's Make America Great. Close, but not the same. Let's -- apostrophe S. You don't want the apostrophe. It's too complicated. It doesn't work. But Ronald Reagan was good. He said let's make -- but he didn't use it. He used it a little bit. We seriously use it, right?"

OHMYGODOHMYGODOHMYGOD

29. "And MAGA we got for free. Because my whole deal was Make America Great Again, all of a sudden people are saying and going #MAGA."

30. "We have a massive television audience, do you ever see so many cameras? If somebody else were here, you'd have about like none."

I've heard that this is a record crowd. So true.

31. "Because I have a couple of friends here. They're pretty wealthy people, very successful people. And you know what? The hell with them. I don't care."

Oh snap, Trump friends, you got dunked on! FACE!

32. "In Michigan, they gave me an award six years, seven years ago, I had no idea. It was the Man of the Year in Michigan."

There's no evidence Trump was ever named "Man of the Year" in Michigan.

33. "They will take your guns away, too, by the way."

Trump passes along this much-debunked notion that Democrats, if put in power, will collect all firearms in the country -- and no one bats an eye.

34. "Now we're sending many of them to sanctuary cities. Thank you very much. They're not too happy about it. I'm proud to tell you that was actually my sick idea."

There's zero evidence that the administration is shipping undocumented immigrants detained at the border to sanctuary cities. In fact, several administration officials have made clear that the policy is not only logistically untenable but also potentially illegal. But, hey, it was Trump's "sick idea"!

35. "To confront the border crisis, I declared a national emergency. The good news is everybody agrees."

[narrator voice] They don't.

36. "They are aggressively pushing extreme late-term abortion, allowing children to be ripped from their mother's womb."

Totally and completely false.

37. "The baby is born. The mother meets with the doctor. They take care of the baby. They wrap the baby beautifully. And then the doctor and the mother determine whether or not they will execute the baby."

Dangerously inaccurate.

38. "We've got a lot of young people out there. You want to know the truth? I actually think we have more than they do."

Hillary Clinton won voters aged 18-29 by 19 points in 2016.

39. "We're very close, $300 million for the Great Lakes Restoration Initiatives."

False!

40. "You know, a lot of times, if you're not going to brag about it, nobody else is, you might as well do it. True."

So true.

41. "And I have to say, every leader without fail that comes to see me in the Oval Office, they all say congratulations."

Every foreign leader who comes to see Trump tells him "congratulations." Every one. Absolutely. This is definitely, 100% true, I'm sure.

42. "With every last ounce of heart and hope and sweat, and so we are going to make our stand."

Speaking of making stands: Why the hell did Jon Snow approve a battle plan where he marched his forces outside of the walls of Winterfell to battle the army of the dead? Like, why not hang out inside the walls? Am I the only one who thinks this?

43. "Together with the great and proud people of Wisconsin, we will make America wealthy again."

Monday. Mark Steven Domingo, 26, an Army veteran, was arrested Friday night after he took delivery of what he thought was a live bomb from an undercover law enforcement officer posing as a bomb-maker, officials said. He was charged with attempting to provide material support to terrorists. According to a federal affidavit, “after considering various attacks — including targeting Jews, churches, and police officers — Domingo decided to detonate an IED at a rally scheduled to take place in Long Beach this past weekend. As part of the plot, Domingo asked his confederate — who actually was cooperating with the FBI as part of the investigation — to find a bomb-maker, and Domingo last week purchased several hundred nails to be used as shrapnel inside the IED. “Domingo said he specifically bought three-inch nails because they would be long enough to penetrate the human body and puncture internal organs,” the affidavit states. Prosecutors said Domingo sought retribution for the New Zealand mosques attack and said he was willing to become a martyr. “There must be retribution,” he said in an online post, according to the federal criminal complaint. He also allegedly expressed allegiance to the Islamic State. “America needs another vegas event ...[to] give them a taste of the terror they gladly spread all over the world,” Domingo allegedly wrote in reference to the massacre at the Route 91 concert in October 2017. The FBI saw the posts and used an informant to begin a series of meetings with Domingo. During these discussions, he talked about targeting “Jews, police officers, churches and a military facility,” authorities said. A law enforcement source told The Times he also considered an attack at the Santa Monica Pier. Domingo talked about a drive-by shooting using an AK-47-style rifle, authorities allege. But officials say he ended up targeting rallies in Long Beach and Huntington Beach. Worried those events might be canceled, he also considered blowing up the Santa Monica Pier, documents show. The terror plot was uncovered less than 48 hours after a gunman opened fire inside a San Diego County synagogue, killing one woman and wounding several others in what law enforcement officials are investigating as an anti-Semitic hate crime. Southern California has been the scene of several terrorism plots and attacks, including one by a prison-based group that targeted the U.S. government and supporters of Israel. In 2005, Kevin James founded Jam'iyyat Ul-Islam Is-Saheeh, or JIS, inside a California prison and led a conspiracy to attack Los Angeles International Airport, several Army recruiting centers and the Israeli Consulate in L.A. The group planned to stage attacks on political targets with the proceeds of gas station robberies, investigators said. Authorities said they learned of the potential plot when Torrance police investigating the robberies found lists of targets and other information at one suspect's apartment in South Los Angeles. Three years before that, a gunman killed two people at the busy LAX ticket counter of El Al Israel Airlines. And in 2015, Syed Rizwan Farook and his wife, Tashfeen Malik, entered a holiday gathering for county employees at the Inland Regional Center in San Bernardino and, using rifles purchased by a friend, killed 14 people and injured 22 others. Authorities said that Farook and a friend had plotted additional terror attacks targeting students at a nearby community college and drivers on the 91 Freeway.

Boy thrown off balcony at Mall of America is alert, family says ‘...The boy and his mother were outside the Rain Forest Café when Aranda came up close to them, according to a criminal complaint. The mother had never seen Aranda before, and she asked if she and her son should move. Instead, Aranda picked up the boy and threw him over the railing, the complaint states. Aranda told police he had come to the mall a day earlier intending to kill an adult, but that did not "work out," according to the complaint. So he returned the next day and apparently chose the boy instead. Aranda told police he knew what he was planning to do was wrong. He explained he had visited the mall for years, trying to speak to women there, but they rejected him. Aranda said that made him lash out...’ Just another day in sick trump america ... NYMAG.COM [MUELLER REPORT CONFIRMS TRUMP RUNS THE WHITE HOUSE LIKE IT'S THE MAFIA

Donald Trump is running the American government like a business – or, if we're being precise, like a criminal enterprise.

The president's penchant for asking himself, "What would Roy Cohn advise John Gotti to do?" has been clear for some time. Last August, Trump said of the possibility that Michael Cohen would cooperate with Robert Mueller's investigation, "I know all about flipping. It should almost be illegal." Around that same time, the president insisted that his White House counsel, Don McGahn, was not a "a John Dean type 'RAT'" — a reference to President Nixon's lawyer, who testified (truthfully) about his boss's attempts to obstruct justice. And Trump has repeatedly argued that the U.S. attorney general's primary responsibility is to demonstrate unflinching loyalty to the president, as though the federal government was the Mafia and Trump its godfather. Thus, Robert Mueller's investigation was never going to reveal that the leader of the free world thinks like a mobster, as that was something we already knew. Nevertheless, the special counsel's report does confirm that fact by detailing three previously unreported instances in which the president's behavior was indistinguishable from that of a mafioso:

The president berated the White House counsel for keeping records on their interactions because “lawyers don’t take notes.”

In June 2017, Trump directed Don McGahn to have Robert Mueller fired. McGahn then let it be known that he would resign before carrying out such an order.

By the following January, the New York Times had gotten wind of that conversation. And when the paper’s story hit newsstands, Trump ordered McGahn to dispute the report. McGahn refused. In a tense Oval Office meeting, Trump further pressured the White House counsel to dispute the Times story — and then asked McGahn about his recent conversations with Mueller’s office. A very mobster-esque exchange ensued:

The President also asked McGahn in the meeting why he had told Special Counsel’s Office investigators that the President had told him to have the Special Counsel removed. McGahn responded that he had to and that his conversations with the President were not protected by attorney-client privilege. The President then asked, “What about these notes? Why do you take notes? Lawyers don’t take notes. I never had a lawyer who took notes.” McGahn responded that he keeps notes because he is a “real lawyer” and explained that notes create a record and are not a bad thing. The President said, “I’ve had a lot of great lawyers, like Roy Cohn. He did not take notes.”

The president once refused to look at evidence of his underlings’ misdeeds lest he end up knowing too much.

In June 2017, Trump learned of the existence of the (now infamous) emails in which his eldest son arranged a meeting with purported Russian operatives at Trump Tower the previous summer (“If it’s what you say I love it”). Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner then tried to fill in the president on documents ostensibly related to that meeting. Trump demurred:

Communications advisors Hope Hicks and Josh Raffel recalled discussing with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump that the emails were damaging and would inevitably be leaked. Hicks and Raffel advised that the best strategy was to proactively release the emails to the press. On or about June 22, 2017, Hicks attended a meeting in the White House residence with the President, Kushner, and Ivanka Trump.

According to Hicks, Kushner said that he wanted to fill the President in on something that had been discovered in the documents he was to provide to the congressional committees involving a meeting with him, Manafort, and Trump Jr. Kushner brought a folder of documents to the meeting and tried to show them to the President, but the President stopped Kushner and said he did not want to know about it, shutting the conversation down. [my emphasis]

After Michael Flynn refused to brief Trump on what he had told federal authorities, Trump's personal lawyer informed Flynn that the president would take note of his "hostility."

In November 2017, Trump's former national security adviser Michael Flynn started cooperating with the special counsel, and withdrew from a joint defense agreement he'd struck with the president. Hours after Trump learned of Flynn's decision, his personal lawyer left a voice-mail for Flynn's counsel:

I understand your situation, but let me see if I can't state it in starker terms ... [I]t wouldn't surprise me if you've gone on to make a deal with ... the government ... [I]f ... there's information that implicates the President, then we've got a national security issue ... so, you know ... we need some kind of heads up. Um, just for the sake of protecting all our interests if we can [R]emember what we've always said about the President and his feelings toward Flynn and that still remains.

Flynn's counsel then informed the president's attorney that it could not provide Trump with such a "heads up." Trump's counsel responded by warning that he would inform the boss of Flynn's "hostility."

Get unlimited access to Intelligencer and everything else New York.

Learn More »

The President's personal counsel said that he interpreted what they said to him as a reflection of Flynn's hostility towards the President and that he planned to inform his client of that interpretation. Flynn's attorneys understood that statement to be an attempt to make them reconsider their position because the President's personal counsel believed that Flynn would be disturbed to know that such a message would be conveyed to the President. [my emphasis]

These anecdotes do not prove that Trump committed obstruction of justice, much less that he participated in a criminal conspiracy with the Russian government. But, assuming that we all agree the American government should not be run like a criminal business, these excerpts alone establish that Congress should not allow Donald Trump to continue being president.

Trump's cognitive deficits seem worse..... he has dementia: Psychologist John Gartner

Susan Edelman Blank "Mitt Romney of Utah called reading Mueller's report "a sobering revelation of how far we have strayed from the aspirations and principles of the founders." "I am sickened at the extent and pervasiveness of dishonesty and misdirection by individuals in the highest office of the land, including the President, I am also appalled that, among other things, fellow citizens working in a campaign for president welcomed help from Russia — including information that had been illegally obtained; that none of them acted to inform American law enforcement; and that the campaign chairman was actively promoting Russian interests in Ukraine."

donny’s poem

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness ..."

"And comes now this hopeless, vicious buffoon, and the audience of equally hopeless and vicious buffoons who laughed and cheered when he made sport of a woman whose lasting memory of the trauma she suffered is the laughter of the perpetrators. Now he comes, a man swathed in scandal, with no interest beyond what he can put in his pocket and what he can put over on a universe of suckers, and he does something like this while occupying an office that we gave him, and while endowed with a public trust that he dishonors every day he wakes up in the White House.

"The scion of a multigenerational criminal enterprise, the parameters of which we are only now beginning to comprehend. A vessel for all the worst elements of the American condition. And a cheap, soulless bully besides. We never have had such a cheap counterfeit of a president* as currently occupies the office. We never have had a president* so completely deserving of scorn and yet so small in the office that it almost seems a waste of time and energy to summon up the requisite contempt.

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness, and who cannot find in himself the decency simply to shut up even when it is in his best interest to do so. Presidents don't have to be heroes to be good presidents. They just have to realize that their humanity is our common humanity and that their political commonwealth is our political commonwealth, too.

Watch him behind the seal of the President of the United States. Isn't he a funny man? Isn't what happened to that lady hilarious? Watch the assembled morons cheer. This is the only story now."

April 10, 2019

President Trump's older sister, Maryanne Trump Barry, has retired as a federal appellate judge, ending an investigation into whether she violated judicial conduct rules by participating in fraudulent tax schemes with her siblings.

The court inquiry stemmed from complaints filed last October, after an investigation by The New York Times found that the Trumps had engaged in dubious tax schemes during the 1990s, including instances of outright fraud, that greatly increased the inherited wealth of Mr. Trump and his siblings. Judge Barry not only benefited financially from most of those tax schemes, The Times found; she was also in a position to influence the actions taken by her family.

Judge Barry, now 82, has not heard cases in more than two years but was still listed as an inactive senior judge, one step short of full retirement. In a letter dated Feb. 1, a court official notified the four individuals who had filed the complaints that the investigation was “receiving the full attention” of a judicial conduct council. Ten days later, Judge Barry filed her retirement papers.

The status change rendered the investigation moot, since retired judges are not subject to the conduct rules. The people who filed the complaints were notified last week that the matter had been dropped without a finding on the merits of the allegations. The decision has not yet been made public, but copies were provided to The Times by two of the complainants. Both are involved in the legal profession.

Judge Barry did not respond to emails or telephone messages left at her Manhattan apartment.

Judicial council reviews can result in the censure or reprimand of federal judges, and in extremely rare cases, a referral to the House of Representatives for impeachment.

In retirement, Judge Barry is entitled to receive annually the salary she earned when she last met certain workload requirements. Though the exact figure was not immediately available, it appears to be between $184,500 and $217,600.

The Times investigation focused on how the profits and ownership of the real estate empire built by the president’s father, Fred C. Trump, were transferred to Donald J. Trump and his siblings, often in ways designed to dodge gift and estate taxes.

A lawyer for the president, Charles J. Harder, said last fall, “The New York Times’s allegations of fraud and tax evasion are 100 percent false, and highly defamatory.”

Judge Barry had been a co-owner of a shell company — All County Building Supply & Maintenance — created by the family to siphon cash from their father’s empire by marking up purchases already made by his employees, The Times investigation found. Judge Barry, her siblings and a cousin split the markup, free of gift and estate taxes, which at the time were levied at a much higher rate than income taxes.

2:04How the Trumps Held On to Generational Wealth

By the end of 1997, Donald Trump and his siblings owned nearly all of Fred Trump's empire, free and clear of estate taxes. How did they do it? A special type of trust with a clunky acronym: GRAT, short for grantor-retained annuity trust. It is one of the tax code's great gifts to the ultrawealthy.

On a financial disclosure form filed in 1999, Judge Barry noted that her share of the All County profits for the previous 17 months totaled just over $1 million.

The family also used the padded invoices to justify higher rent increases in rent-regulated buildings, artificially inflating the rents of thousands of tenants. Former prosecutors told The Times that if the authorities had discovered at the time how the Trumps were using All County, their actions would have warranted a criminal investigation for defrauding tenants, tax fraud and filing false documents.

Similarly, Judge Barry benefited from the gross undervaluation of her father's properties when she and her siblings took ownership of them through a trust, sparing them from paying tens of millions of dollars in taxes, The Times found. For years, she attended regular briefings at her brother's offices in Trump Tower to hear updates on the real estate portfolio and to collect her share of the profits. When the siblings sold off their father's empire, between 2004 and 2006, her share of the windfall was $182.5 million, The Times found.

Judge Barry was nominated to the Federal District Court in New Jersey by President Ronald Reagan in 1983, after several years as a federal prosecutor. She was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by President Bill Clinton in 1999.

In February 2017, shortly after her brother's inauguration, she notified the court that she would stop hearing cases and give up her staff and chambers. She was then considered a senior inactive judge, a status that did not entitle her to salary increases, but that left her still subject to conduct inquiries. Judge Barry did not announce a reason for the change at the time.

Following confidentiality requirements, Judge Barry's name does not appear on the order ending the investigation or the correspondence with the complainants. The order identifies the judge in question as a senior inactive judge, about whom complaints were filed in October 2018. Under court rules, all complaints are reviewed by a judge, and those with an allegation of misconduct or disability are generally referred to a panel of judges for investigation.

Robin Alperstein wrote:

Two things are happening simultaneously in front of our eyes, and they are interconnected, terrifying, and enraging.

The first is that Trump is unraveling, becoming more unhinged and erratic almost by the day. He is in open cognitive decline. You don't have to be a shrink or neuropsychologist to see it. That cognitive decline -- which is occurring under a microscope before a world audience of billions -- would be scary and destabilizing enough on its own; but married to the character traits of a sociopath, it is incredibly dangerous. The rage and lack of capacity, the flailing, the insults, the paranoia, the self-aggrandizement, the raw hatred, the lies, the attacks on others, the rejection of truth and attacks on the most basic of democratic institutions, the vindictiveness and pettiness, the frothing obsession over his own illegitimacy....These are all getting worse and worse, in plain sight.

The second is that the GOP has coalesced further around Trump and even those who some of us thought were "reachable" are doubling down in support of his assaults on fundamental precepts required for our country to function as a democratic state. In some ways this is, of course, a continuation of the Reagan/Bush projects, of Newt Gingrich, and of Mitch McConnell's rejection of democracy when Obama was elected. But still there was some residual hope or belief that at least some of these GOP Congress people would act to preserve the Congress as a co-equal branch of government, abide by the Constitution, protect this country from foreign enemies and influence, repel fascism, and reject the forces of darkness that are rising across Europe, South America, and elsewhere.

But as Trump's depredations and Constitutional violations and lies have increased and worsened, as the devolution continues, and our norms are shattered with impunity, the GOP has not said "no." It has not said "enough is enough." There is no McCarthy moment that is going to happen.

And no matter how unhinged, how patently unfit, how incompetent, how erratic, how vile, how cruel, how dangerous, or how criminal Trump's conduct appears to be, they will close their ranks and defend him. They will support Barr's cover-up and declare "Mission Accomplished"; they will defend ripping children from their parents' arms; they will support his dismantling of the FBI's domestic terrorism unit even as Trump inspires such terrorists at home and abroad; they will fight against the Violence Against Women Act as they support an admitted and accused sexual assaulter and seek to strip women of any control over their own bodies and lives; they will rubber-stamp religious fanatics and extremists whose views are rejected by 80% of Americans into lifelong positions from which they can tyrannize the rest of the country; they will sabotage any and all efforts to protect the planet; they will refuse to bring to a vote critical reforms necessary to remove the pernicious and undemocratic influence of big money and corporations and foreigners from our elections; they will not protect our voting machines and will continue to actively prevent people from voting; they will let critical appointments go unfilled or staffed by corrupt stooges that Putin would salivate over.

And they will gaslight us all and pretend this is normal; they will attack Democrats as "partisans" for daring to believe that a monster like Trump should not be above the law; that it is fine to let his unqualified children into the government and have security clearances over everyone's objection; they will refuse to permit or join in necessary examination into the ways in which the Trump crime family's business interests now substitute for foreign policy.

And no matter how insane he acts, no matter how he treats everyone but his cult as an enemy to be attacked rather than as citizens whom he has a Constitutional obligation to protect, the worse he behaves, it is clear there will be no 25th Amendment solution. They will defend his cognition just as they defend his attacks on children, the Democrats, women, POC, immigrants, the LGBTQIA community, the disabled, the press, and truth. They will lie for him, they will cheat for him, because he is them and they are him. And they will do everything in their power to ensure that Trump and his family are never held accountable. And mocking Trump for saying "oranges" instead of "origins" isn't funny -- he is losing his ability to speak because he has dementia. But you'll never hear the GOP admit that.

Things were bad before but they are getting worse because Trump is emboldened, and so is his party. The government is run by monsters like Stephen Miller, a creature so debased and straight out of central casting he is practically a mirage, and by corrupt arrogant bastards like Mnuchin and Ross and McConnell, and by lickspittles like Graham and Barr and Pence whose servile prostration before Trump would be comical were it not so nauseating and dangerous. Not one has a shred of integrity; not one puts the Constitution or the country first.

I see a lot of people turning away in disgust from the news, from Twitter, from FB, from conversation, and, also from ACTION. I see fear and despair. And so much exhaustion.

I share these feelings. This past week, with Barr's testimony and the state-level efforts to criminalize abortion and the disrespect of Mnuchin for Waters and the rank imbecility of that moronic rep toward John Kerry and the attacks on Schiff and the odious criminal Netanyahu's re-election, I have wanted to disappear or close my eyes or just pretend this is not our world.

But it is. And it can get far worse; that is what the GOP across the country with Trump at its helm is trying to do. It is going to continue to get worse and there is no easy fix for our broken political system.

We have two choices. Fight; or give up and let them win.

Fighting doesn't guarantee our victory. But giving up guarantees theirs.

I am deeply conscious of the privilege that lets me feel that I am "fighting" -- I can physically and financially show up in ways that many others can't. But yet I don't do nearly enough; nothing I do is ever enough; nothing can ever be enough. And sometimes it feels futile and hopeless, and I don't think "the need for self-care" is a good enough excuse for not doing more. I know I need to do more. And when I am tired I think about how I will feel when things get even worse if I did nothing to try to stop it. When my children or grandchildren ask me, "what did you do to stop Trump?" at least I will have a decent answer for them. I will have a list.

And I think that if we all recognize that there are no saviors, no magic, easy fixes, no clean cure for the GOP's rot or its supporters' racism and misogyny or just pure unadulterated selfishness, if we just recognize that each of us has it in us to do something, something more than just vote, and maybe to find a single project to work on to support NOW, not a year from now, not six weeks before the election, not the weekend before the elections, but now, this year, and all year long, we will be able to save ourselves the way we started to in 2018. But our odds will be worse; Trump and the GOP will be further entrenched in their descent into fascism, and their assaults on democracy will be even further normalized. They push back and fight against every gain we make, they obstruct all progress. This is not a one-off fight. And it sucks. We should not have to fight all the time, all the time, for decency, or for our lives. But this is how the marginalized in this country have lived their lives, always: assaulted, gaslighted, fighting to take up space, to be allowed autonomy, to count. This is what BLM is about. Trump and the GOP have made it crystal clear that, in fact, very few lives matter to them; and most of those lives are rich and white and male and straight and donate to the GOP.

Many of us are not used to living this way. It's a horrible way to live, but people adapt, don't they? They become inured or they fight. Or both.

I refuse to become inured. I hope you will do the same.

Trump is so mentally ill!

Susan Edelman Blank AUTHORS OF THE DANGEROUS CASE OF DONALD TRUMP TO RELEASE MENTAL HEALTH ANALYSIS OF MUELLER REPORT

If One is Too Incompetent to Commit a Crime, Despite Trying Hard, Is One Competent to be President?

The Mueller Report may not have enough to indict a president, but it is a document of extraordinary evidence on mental incapacity

Washington, DC, April 25, 2019 — Leading psychiatrists, psychologists, and mental health experts have released a “report on the Mueller report, “highlighting its extensive documentation of Donald Trump’s psychological characteristics that point to dangerousness and incapacity to serve in his office. Beyond previous reports of actions and statements, the Mueller report shows the more compelling patterns of impulsivity, recklessness, a lack of firm grip on reality, manipulation of advisors, absorption in self-interest that overrides national interest, inability to consider consequences before taking action, paranoid reactions, an attraction to violence, and an absence of empathy, as well as apparent cognitive and memory difficulties. Without diagnosing, these make the President clearly a danger in his role as Commander in Chief and one on whom the world relies for steady and wise actions in international affairs.

We are among the 37 mental health experts, including some of the most renowned psychiatrists and psychologists in the country, who put their analysis in the bestselling book, The Dangerous Case of Donald Trump. An April 2017 conference at Yale School of Medicine, organized by Yale professor Bandy X. Lee clarified the responsibility of mental health professionals to society to point out dangers in our midst and to share their expertise in helping the public to recognize and address those dangers. That conference led to two editions of this public-service book and the World Mental Health Coalition (dangerouscase.org), an organization of thousands of mental health professionals who have joined together to step up in addressing the dangers posed by the president.

Now, the Mueller report brings new evidence as well as confirmation of the evidence on which we based our assessment two years ago. As detailed in the document released today, the Mueller report further confirms the reasons why we believed that the president’s condition was severe and would only grow worse over time in his current position.

Seldom do mental health professionals have the quantity of detailed information the Mueller report provides of an individual's behavior, verified with the caliber of a criminal investigation of the highest order. Now, we can state with a high level of confidence, based on data that vastly exceed what we ordinarily have in clinical practice, that the evidence of the president's mental incapacity is overwhelming.

In the interest of making a reasonable attempt to obtain a personal interview, we request that the president sit through a formal evaluation by a panel of independent experts, which the President should be able to agree to if he believes he is fit to serve. We request that he agree to do so within three weeks. We believe that, given the enormous high-quality data now available, and the extreme dangers implied in presidential incapacity, it is imperative that the president clarify the matter of incapacity through a thorough examination. In the event of refusal, we believe that we have enough evidence to come to a conclusion and will pursue this in the ensuing weeks.

If One is Too Incompetent to Commit a Crime, Despite Trying Hard, Is One Competent to be President?

The Mueller Report may not have enough to indict a president, but it is a document of extraordinary evidence on mental incapacity

Washington, DC, April 25, 2019 — Leading psychiatrists, psychologists, and mental health experts have released a “report on the Mueller report, ”highlighting its extensive documentation of Donald Trump’s psychological characteristics that point to dangerousness and incapacity to serve in his office. Beyond previous reports of actions and statements, the Mueller report shows the more compelling patterns of impulsivity, recklessness, a lack of firm grip on reality, manipulation of advisors, absorption in self-interest that overrides national interest, inability to consider consequences before taking action, paranoid reactions, an attraction to violence, and an absence of empathy, as well as apparent cognitive and memory difficulties. Without diagnosing, these make the President clearly a danger in his role as Commander in Chief and one on whom the world relies for steady and wise actions in international affairs.

We are among the 37 mental health experts, including some of the most renowned psychiatrists and psychologists in the country, who put their analysis in the bestselling book, The Dangerous Case of Donald Trump. An April 2017 conference at Yale School of Medicine, organized by Yale professor Bandy X. Lee clarified the responsibility of mental health professionals to society to point out dangers in our midst and to share their expertise in helping the public to recognize and address those dangers. That conference led to two editions of this public-service book and the World Mental Health Coalition (dangerouscase.org), an organization of thousands of mental health professionals who have joined together to step up in addressing the dangers posed by the president.

'Obstruction of justice-the statute making obstruction criminal-prohibits interfering, or attempting to interfere, with a criminal prosecution or an investigation the government's conducting' Napolitano said. The Mueller Report, Napolitano believes, lays out a number of presidential acts that constitute obstruction of justice including:

- When Trump asked Deputy National Security Adviser KT McFarland to write an untruthful letter to the file, knowing the government would subpoena it.
- When Trump asked Corey Lewandowski to get Mueller fired.
- When Trump asked Don McGahn to get Mueller fired and then to lie about it.
- When Trump asked McGahn to go back to Mueller's team and change his testimony.
- When Trump dangled a pardon in front of Michael Cohen, in order to keep Cohen from testifying against him.

Chris Wallace: Attorney General Barr's decision to reach a conclusion on obstruction is troubling

NYMAG.COM MUELLER REPORT CONFIRMS TRUMP RUNS THE WHITE HOUSE LIKE IT'S THE MAFIA

Donald Trump is running the American government like a business – or, if we're being precise, like a criminal enterprise.

The president's penchant for asking himself, "What would Roy Cohn advise John Gotti to do?" has been clear for some time. Last August, Trump said of the possibility that Michael Cohen would cooperate with Robert Mueller's investigation, "I know all about flipping. It should almost be illegal." Around that same time, the president insisted that his White House counsel, Don McGahn, was not a "a John Dean type 'RAT'" — a reference to President Nixon's lawyer, who testified (truthfully) about his boss's attempts to obstruct justice. And Trump has repeatedly argued that the U.S. attorney general's primary responsibility is to demonstrate unflinching loyalty to the president, as though the federal government was the Mafia and Trump its godfather. Thus, Robert Mueller's investigation was never going to reveal that the leader of the free world thinks like a mobster, as that was something we already knew. Nevertheless, the special counsel's report does confirm that fact by detailing three previously unreported instances in which the president's behavior was indistinguishable from that of a mafioso:

The president berated the White House counsel for keeping records on their interactions because “lawyers don’t take notes.”

In June 2017, Trump directed Don McGahn to have Robert Mueller fired. McGahn then let it be known that he would resign before carrying out such an order.

By the following January, the New York Times had gotten wind of that conversation. And when the paper’s story hit newsstands, Trump ordered McGahn to dispute the report. McGahn refused. In a tense Oval Office meeting, Trump further pressured the White House counsel to dispute the Times story — and then asked McGahn about his recent conversations with Mueller’s office. A very mobster-esque exchange ensued:

The President also asked McGahn in the meeting why he had told Special Counsel’s Office investigators that the President had told him to have the Special Counsel removed. McGahn responded that he had to and that his conversations with the President were not protected by attorney-client privilege. The President then asked, “What about these notes? Why do you take notes? Lawyers don’t take notes. I never had a lawyer who took notes.” McGahn responded that he keeps notes because he is a “real lawyer” and explained that notes create a record and are not a bad thing. The President said, “I’ve had a lot of great lawyers, like Roy Cohn. He did not take notes.”

The president once refused to look at evidence of his underlings’ misdeeds lest he end up knowing too much.

In June 2017, Trump learned of the existence of the (now infamous) emails in which his eldest son arranged a meeting with purported Russian operatives at Trump Tower the previous summer (“If it’s what you say I love it”). Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner then tried to fill in the president on documents ostensibly related to that meeting. Trump demurred:

Communications advisors Hope Hicks and Josh Raffel recalled discussing with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump that the emails were damaging and would inevitably be leaked. Hicks and Raffel advised that the best strategy was to proactively release the emails to the press. On or about June 22, 2017, Hicks attended a meeting in the White House residence with the President, Kushner, and Ivanka Trump.

According to Hicks, Kushner said that he wanted to fill the President in on something that had been discovered in the documents he was to provide to the congressional committees involving a meeting with him, Manafort, and Trump Jr. Kushner brought a folder of documents to the meeting and tried to show them to the President, but the President stopped Kushner and said he did not want to know about it, shutting the conversation down. [my emphasis]

After Michael Flynn refused to brief Trump on what he had told federal authorities, Trump's personal lawyer informed Flynn that the president would take note of his "hostility."

In November 2017, Trump's former national security adviser Michael Flynn started cooperating with the special counsel, and withdrew from a joint defense agreement he'd struck with the president. Hours after Trump learned of Flynn's decision, his personal lawyer left a voice-mail for Flynn's counsel:

I understand your situation, but let me see if I can't state it in starker terms ... [I]t wouldn't surprise me if you've gone on to make a deal with ... the government ... [I]f ... there's information that implicates the President, then we've got a national security issue ... so, you know ... we need some kind of heads up. Um, just for the sake of protecting all our interests if we can [R]emember what we've always said about the President and his feelings toward Flynn and that still remains.

Flynn's counsel then informed the president's attorney that it could not provide Trump with such a "heads up." Trump's counsel responded by warning that he would inform the boss of Flynn's "hostility."

The President's personal counsel said that he interpreted what they said to him as a reflection of Flynn's hostility towards the President and that he planned to inform his client of that interpretation. Flynn's attorneys understood that statement to be an attempt to make them reconsider their position because the President's personal counsel believed that Flynn would be disturbed to know that such a message would be conveyed to the President. [my emphasis]

These anecdotes do not prove that Trump committed obstruction of justice, much less that he participated in a criminal conspiracy with the Russian government. But, assuming that we all agree the American government should not be run like a criminal business, these excerpts alone establish that Congress should not allow Donald Trump to continue being president.

Trump's cognitive deficits seem worse..... he has dementia: Psychologist John Gartner

Susan Edelman Blank "Mitt Romney of Utah called reading Mueller's report "a sobering revelation of how far we have strayed from the aspirations and principles of the founders." "I am sickened at the extent and pervasiveness of dishonesty and misdirection by individuals in the highest office of the land, including the President, I am also appalled that, among other things, fellow citizens working in a campaign for president welcomed help from Russia — including information that had been illegally obtained; that none of them acted to inform American law enforcement; and that the campaign chairman was actively promoting Russian interests in Ukraine."

donny’s poem

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness ..."

"And comes now this hopeless, vicious buffoon, and the audience of equally hopeless and vicious buffoons who laughed and cheered when he made sport of a woman whose lasting memory of the trauma she suffered is the laughter of the perpetrators. Now he comes, a man swathed in scandal, with no interest beyond what he can put in his pocket and what he can put over on a universe of suckers, and he does something like this while occupying an office that we gave him, and while endowed with a public trust that he dishonors every day he wakes up in the White House.

"The scion of a multigenerational criminal enterprise, the parameters of which we are only now beginning to comprehend. A vessel for all the worst elements of the American condition. And a cheap, soulless bully besides. We never have had such a cheap counterfeit of a president* as currently occupies the office. We never have had a president* so completely deserving of scorn and yet so small in the office that it almost seems a waste of time and energy to summon up the requisite contempt.

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness, and who cannot find in himself the decency simply to shut up even when it is in his best interest to do so. Presidents don't have to be heroes to be good presidents. They just have to realize that their humanity is our common humanity and that their political commonwealth is our political commonwealth, too.

Watch him behind the seal of the President of the United States. Isn't he a funny man? Isn't what happened to that lady hilarious? Watch the assembled morons cheer. This is the only story now."

By Russ Buettner and Susanne Craig

April 10, 2019

President Trump's older sister, Maryanne Trump Barry, has retired as a federal appellate judge, ending an investigation into whether she violated judicial conduct rules by participating in fraudulent tax schemes with her siblings.

The court inquiry stemmed from complaints filed last October, after an investigation by The New York Times found that the Trumps had engaged in dubious tax schemes during the 1990s, including instances of outright fraud, that greatly increased the inherited wealth of Mr. Trump and his siblings. Judge Barry not only benefited financially from most of those tax schemes, The Times found; she was also in a position to influence the actions taken by her family.

Judge Barry, now 82, has not heard cases in more than two years but was still listed as an inactive senior judge, one step short of full retirement. In a letter dated Feb. 1, a court official notified the four individuals who had filed the complaints that the investigation was “receiving the full attention” of a judicial conduct council. Ten days later, Judge Barry filed her retirement papers.

The status change rendered the investigation moot, since retired judges are not subject to the conduct rules. The people who filed the complaints were notified last week that the matter had been dropped without a finding on the merits of the allegations. The decision has not yet been made public, but copies were provided to The Times by two of the complainants. Both are involved in the legal profession.

Judge Barry did not respond to emails or telephone messages left at her Manhattan apartment.

Judicial council reviews can result in the censure or reprimand of federal judges, and in extremely rare cases, a referral to the House of Representatives for impeachment.

In retirement, Judge Barry is entitled to receive annually the salary she earned when she last met certain workload requirements. Though the exact figure was not immediately available, it appears to be between $184,500 and $217,600.

The Times investigation focused on how the profits and ownership of the real estate empire built by the president’s father, Fred C. Trump, were transferred to Donald J. Trump and his siblings, often in ways designed to dodge gift and estate taxes.

A lawyer for the president, Charles J. Harder, said last fall, “The New York Times’s allegations of fraud and tax evasion are 100 percent false, and highly defamatory.”

Judge Barry had been a co-owner of a shell company — All County Building Supply & Maintenance — created by the family to siphon cash from their father’s empire by marking up purchases already made by his employees, The Times investigation found. Judge Barry, her siblings and a cousin split the markup, free of gift and estate taxes, which at the time were levied at a much higher rate than income taxes.

2:04How the Trumps Held On to Generational Wealth

By the end of 1997, Donald Trump and his siblings owned nearly all of Fred Trump's empire, free and clear of estate taxes. How did they do it? A special type of trust with a clunky acronym: GRAT, short for grantor-retained annuity trust. It is one of the tax code's great gifts to the ultrawealthy.

On a financial disclosure form filed in 1999, Judge Barry noted that her share of the All County profits for the previous 17 months totaled just over $1 million.

The family also used the padded invoices to justify higher rent increases in rent-regulated buildings, artificially inflating the rents of thousands of tenants. Former prosecutors told The Times that if the authorities had discovered at the time how the Trumps were using All County, their actions would have warranted a criminal investigation for defrauding tenants, tax fraud and filing false documents.

Similarly, Judge Barry benefited from the gross undervaluation of her father's properties when she and her siblings took ownership of them through a trust, sparing them from paying tens of millions of dollars in taxes, The Times found. For years, she attended regular briefings at her brother's offices in Trump Tower to hear updates on the real estate portfolio and to collect her share of the profits. When the siblings sold off their father's empire, between 2004 and 2006, her share of the windfall was $182.5 million, The Times found.

Judge Barry was nominated to the Federal District Court in New Jersey by President Ronald Reagan in 1983, after several years as a federal prosecutor. She was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by President Bill Clinton in 1999.

In February 2017, shortly after her brother's inauguration, she notified the court that she would stop hearing cases and give up her staff and chambers. She was then considered a senior inactive judge, a status that did not entitle her to salary increases, but that left her still subject to conduct inquiries. Judge Barry did not announce a reason for the change at the time.

Following confidentiality requirements, Judge Barry's name does not appear on the order ending the investigation or the correspondence with the complainants. The order identifies the judge in question as a senior inactive judge, about whom complaints were filed in October 2018. Under court rules, all complaints are reviewed by a judge, and those with an allegation of misconduct or disability are generally referred to a panel of judges for investigation.

Robin Alperstein wrote:

Two things are happening simultaneously in front of our eyes, and they are interconnected, terrifying, and enraging.

The first is that Trump is unraveling, becoming more unhinged and erratic almost by the day. He is in open cognitive decline. You don't have to be a shrink or neuropsychologist to see it. That cognitive decline -- which is occurring under a microscope before a world audience of billions -- would be scary and destabilizing enough on its own; but married to the character traits of a sociopath, it is incredibly dangerous. The rage and lack of capacity, the flailing, the insults, the paranoia, the self-aggrandizement, the raw hatred, the lies, the attacks on others, the rejection of truth and attacks on the most basic of democratic institutions, the vindictiveness and pettiness, the frothing obsession over his own illegitimacy....These are all getting worse and worse, in plain sight.

The second is that the GOP has coalesced further around Trump and even those who some of us thought were "reachable" are doubling down in support of his assaults on fundamental precepts required for our country to function as a democratic state. In some ways this is, of course, a continuation of the Reagan/Bush projects, of Newt Gingrich, and of Mitch McConnell's rejection of democracy when Obama was elected. But still there was some residual hope or belief that at least some of these GOP Congress people would act to preserve the Congress as a co-equal branch of government, abide by the Constitution, protect this country from foreign enemies and influence, repel fascism, and reject the forces of darkness that are rising across Europe, South America, and elsewhere.

But as Trump's depredations and Constitutional violations and lies have increased and worsened, as the devolution continues, and our norms are shattered with impunity, the GOP has not said "no." It has not said "enough is enough." There is no McCarthy moment that is going to happen.

And no matter how unhinged, how patently unfit, how incompetent, how erratic, how vile, how cruel, how dangerous, or how criminal Trump's conduct appears to be, they will close their ranks and defend him. They will support Barr's cover-up and declare "Mission Accomplished"; they will defend ripping children from their parents' arms; they will support his dismantling of the FBI's domestic terrorism unit even as Trump inspires such terrorists at home and abroad; they will fight against the Violence Against Women Act as they support an admitted and accused sexual assaulter and seek to strip women of any control over their own bodies and lives; they will rubber-stamp religious fanatics and extremists whose views are rejected by 80% of Americans into lifelong positions from which they can tyrannize the rest of the country; they will sabotage any and all efforts to protect the planet; they will refuse to bring to a vote critical reforms necessary to remove the pernicious and undemocratic influence of big money and corporations and foreigners from our elections; they will not protect our voting machines and will continue to actively prevent people from voting; they will let critical appointments go unfilled or staffed by corrupt stooges that Putin would salivate over.

And they will gaslight us all and pretend this is normal; they will attack Democrats as "partisans" for daring to believe that a monster like Trump should not be above the law; that it is fine to let his unqualified children into the government and have security clearances over everyone's objection; they will refuse to permit or join in necessary examination into the ways in which the Trump crime family's business interests now substitute for foreign policy.

And no matter how insane he acts, no matter how he treats everyone but his cult as an enemy to be attacked rather than as citizens whom he has a Constitutional obligation to protect, the worse he behaves, it is clear there will be no 25th Amendment solution. They will defend his cognition just as they defend his attacks on children, the Democrats, women, POC, immigrants, the LGBTQIA community, the disabled, the press, and truth. They will lie for him, they will cheat for him, because he is them and they are him. And they will do everything in their power to ensure that Trump and his family are never held accountable. And mocking Trump for saying "oranges" instead of "origins" isn't funny -- he is losing his ability to speak because he has dementia. But you'll never hear the GOP admit that.

Things were bad before but they are getting worse because Trump is emboldened, and so is his party. The government is run by monsters like Stephen Miller, a creature so debased and straight out of central casting he is practically a mirage, and by corrupt arrogant bastards like Mnuchin and Ross and McConnell, and by lickspittles like Graham and Barr and Pence whose servile prostration before Trump would be comical were it not so nauseating and dangerous. Not one has a shred of integrity; not one puts the Constitution or the country first.

I see a lot of people turning away in disgust from the news, from Twitter, from FB, from conversation, and, also from ACTION. I see fear and despair. And so much exhaustion.

I share these feelings. This past week, with Barr's testimony and the state-level efforts to criminalize abortion and the disrespect of Mnuchin for Waters and the rank imbecility of that moronic rep toward John Kerry and the attacks on Schiff and the odious criminal Netanyahu's re-election, I have wanted to disappear or close my eyes or just pretend this is not our world.

But it is. And it can get far worse; that is what the GOP across the country with Trump at its helm is trying to do. It is going to continue to get worse and there is no easy fix for our broken political system.

We have two choices. Fight; or give up and let them win.

Fighting doesn't guarantee our victory. But giving up guarantees theirs.

I am deeply conscious of the privilege that lets me feel that I am "fighting" -- I can physically and financially show up in ways that many others can't. But yet I don't do nearly enough; nothing I do is ever enough; nothing can ever be enough. And sometimes it feels futile and hopeless, and I don't think "the need for self-care" is a good enough excuse for not doing more. I know I need to do more. And when I am tired I think about how I will feel when things get even worse if I did nothing to try to stop it. When my children or grandchildren ask me, "what did you do to stop Trump?" at least I will have a decent answer for them. I will have a list.

And I think that if we all recognize that there are no saviors, no magic, easy fixes, no clean cure for the GOP's rot or its supporters' racism and misogyny or just pure unadulterated selfishness, if we just recognize that each of us has it in us to do something, something more than just vote, and maybe to find a single project to work on to support NOW, not a year from now, not six weeks before the election, not the weekend before the elections, but now, this year, and all year long, we will be able to save ourselves the way we started to in 2018. But our odds will be worse; Trump and the GOP will be further entrenched in their descent into fascism, and their assaults on democracy will be even further normalized. They push back and fight against every gain we make, they obstruct all progress. This is not a one-off fight. And it sucks. We should not have to fight all the time, all the time, for decency, or for our lives. But this is how the marginalized in this country have lived their lives, always: assaulted, gaslighted, fighting to take up space, to be allowed autonomy, to count. This is what BLM is about. Trump and the GOP have made it crystal clear that, in fact, very few lives matter to them; and most of those lives are rich and white and male and straight and donate to the GOP.

Many of us are not used to living this way. It's a horrible way to live, but people adapt, don't they? They become inured or they fight. Or both.

I refuse to become inured. I hope you will do the same.

Analysis: Trump's shameful about-face on Otto Warmbier

Otto Warmbier's family rebukes Trump, says Kim Jong Un is responsible for son's death

Opinion: Trump's Warmbier comments mark shameful day for US (CNN) It almost sounded like compassion -- compassion for the North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un -- when President Donald Trump explained that Kim "felt very badly" about what had happened to Otto Warmbier, the 22-year-old American student taken prisoner by Kim's henchmen for 17 months. Gone were Trump's charges that Kim runs a "brutal regime," which he stated when Warmbier was returned to the United States in 2017-- in a coma. He died less than a week later.

At a press conference in Hanoi on Thursday, Trump said of Kim, "I will take him at his word."

It was another demeaning moment not only for Trump, who has gushed about the tyrant on several occasions, but also for America. And it was made even more humiliating for the United States when the President heaped additional praise on Kim's "great leadership," which he said will bring much success to his country.....'

Satan Is Having A Moment

'..... That much is clear in the fantastic new documentary "Hail Satan?" — which chronicles the rise of the Satanic Temple, a movement that has little to do with its titular demon. Founded in 2013, the organization is equal parts modern-day religion, political activist coalition and meta cultural revolution. By reclaiming the pop iconography that has long frightened evangelical America – devil worship, ritualistic sacrifice, horns, pentagrams, the so-called Black Mass – the Satanic Temple aims to catch people’s attention and then surprise them with messages of free speech, compassion, liberty and justice for all.

Specifically, note how porcine trump et als look; viz., huck sanders, trump, pompeo, barr, and even the thinner of the gang, ie., cornholer lindsey graham, etc., really frightfully pathetic! Then another genre, horror, with 'son of a mafia' ghoulani, et als. Let's not even talk about another very familiar, very trump theme, viz., 'Working Girls' (oldest profession in the world type).

NYMAG.COM MUELLER REPORT CONFIRMS TRUMP RUNS THE WHITE HOUSE LIKE IT'S THE MAFIA

Donald Trump is running the American government like a business – or, if we're being precise, like a criminal enterprise.

The president's penchant for asking himself, "What would Roy Cohn advise John Gotti to do?" has been clear for some time. Last August, Trump said of the possibility that Michael Cohen would cooperate with Robert Mueller's investigation, "I know all about flipping. It should almost be illegal." Around that same time, the president insisted that his White House counsel, Don McGahn, was not a "a John Dean type 'RAT'" — a reference to President Nixon's lawyer, who testified (truthfully) about his boss's attempts to obstruct justice. And Trump has repeatedly argued that the U.S. attorney general's primary responsibility is to demonstrate unflinching loyalty to the president, as though the federal government was the Mafia and Trump its godfather. Thus, Robert Mueller's investigation was never going to reveal that the leader of the free world thinks like a mobster, as that was something we already knew. Nevertheless, the special counsel's report does confirm that fact by detailing three previously unreported instances in which the president's behavior was indistinguishable from that of a mafioso:

The president berated the White House counsel for keeping records on their interactions because “lawyers don’t take notes.”

In June 2017, Trump directed Don McGahn to have Robert Mueller fired. McGahn then let it be known that he would resign before carrying out such an order.

By the following January, the New York Times had gotten wind of that conversation. And when the paper’s story hit newsstands, Trump ordered McGahn to dispute the report. McGahn refused. In a tense Oval Office meeting, Trump further pressured the White House counsel to dispute the Times story — and then asked McGahn about his recent conversations with Mueller’s office. A very mobster-esque exchange ensued:

The President also asked McGahn in the meeting why he had told Special Counsel’s Office investigators that the President had told him to have the Special Counsel removed. McGahn responded that he had to and that his conversations with the President were not protected by attorney-client privilege. The President then asked, “What about these notes? Why do you take notes? Lawyers don’t take notes. I never had a lawyer who took notes.” McGahn responded that he keeps notes because he is a “real lawyer” and explained that notes create a record and are not a bad thing. The President said, “I’ve had a lot of great lawyers, like Roy Cohn. He did not take notes.”

The president once refused to look at evidence of his underlings’ misdeeds lest he end up knowing too much.

In June 2017, Trump learned of the existence of the (now infamous) emails in which his eldest son arranged a meeting with purported Russian operatives at Trump Tower the previous summer (“If it’s what you say I love it”). Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner then tried to fill in the president on documents ostensibly related to that meeting. Trump demurred:

Communications advisors Hope Hicks and Josh Raffel recalled discussing with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump that the emails were damaging and would inevitably be leaked. Hicks and Raffel advised that the best strategy was to proactively release the emails to the press. On or about June 22, 2017, Hicks attended a meeting in the White House residence with the President, Kushner, and Ivanka Trump.

According to Hicks, Kushner said that he wanted to fill the President in on something that had been discovered in the documents he was to provide to the congressional committees involving a meeting with him, Manafort, and Trump Jr. Kushner brought a folder of documents to the meeting and tried to show them to the President, but the President stopped Kushner and said he did not want to know about it, shutting the conversation down. [my emphasis]

After Michael Flynn refused to brief Trump on what he had told federal authorities, Trump's personal lawyer informed Flynn that the president would take note of his "hostility."

In November 2017, Trump's former national security adviser Michael Flynn started cooperating with the special counsel, and withdrew from a joint defense agreement he'd struck with the president. Hours after Trump learned of Flynn's decision, his personal lawyer left a voice-mail for Flynn's counsel:

I understand your situation, but let me see if I can't state it in starker terms ... [I]t wouldn't surprise me if you've gone on to make a deal with ... the government ... [I]f ... there's information that implicates the President, then we've got a national security issue ... so, you know ... we need some kind of heads up. Um, just for the sake of protecting all our interests if we can [R]emember what we've always said about the President and his feelings toward Flynn and that still remains.

Flynn's counsel then informed the president's attorney that it could not provide Trump with such a "heads up." Trump's counsel responded by warning that he would inform the boss of Flynn's "hostility."

Get unlimited access to Intelligencer and everything else New York.

Learn More »

The President's personal counsel said that he interpreted what they said to him as a reflection of Flynn's hostility towards the President and that he planned to inform his client of that interpretation. Flynn's attorneys understood that statement to be an attempt to make them reconsider their position because the President's personal counsel believed that Flynn would be disturbed to know that such a message would be conveyed to the President. [my emphasis]

These anecdotes do not prove that Trump committed obstruction of justice, much less that he participated in a criminal conspiracy with the Russian government. But, assuming that we all agree the American government should not be run like a criminal business, these excerpts alone establish that Congress should not allow Donald Trump to continue being president.

Trump's cognitive deficits seem worse..... he has dementia: Psychologist John Gartner

Susan Edelman Blank "Mitt Romney of Utah called reading Mueller's report "a sobering revelation of how far we have strayed from the aspirations and principles of the founders." "I am sickened at the extent and pervasiveness of dishonesty and misdirection by individuals in the highest office of the land, including the President, I am also appalled that, among other things, fellow citizens working in a campaign for president welcomed help from Russia — including information that had been illegally obtained; that none of them acted to inform American law enforcement; and that the campaign chairman was actively promoting Russian interests in Ukraine."

donny’s poem

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness ..."

"And comes now this hopeless, vicious buffoon, and the audience of equally hopeless and vicious buffoons who laughed and cheered when he made sport of a woman whose lasting memory of the trauma she suffered is the laughter of the perpetrators. Now he comes, a man swathed in scandal, with no interest beyond what he can put in his pocket and what he can put over on a universe of suckers, and he does something like this while occupying an office that we gave him, and while endowed with a public trust that he dishonors every day he wakes up in the White House.

"The scion of a multigenerational criminal enterprise, the parameters of which we are only now beginning to comprehend. A vessel for all the worst elements of the American condition. And a cheap, soulless bully besides. We never have had such a cheap counterfeit of a president* as currently occupies the office. We never have had a president* so completely deserving of scorn and yet so small in the office that it almost seems a waste of time and energy to summon up the requisite contempt.

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness, and who cannot find in himself the decency simply to shut up even when it is in his best interest to do so. Presidents don't have to be heroes to be good presidents. They just have to realize that their humanity is our common humanity and that their political commonwealth is our political commonwealth, too.

Watch him behind the seal of the President of the United States. Isn't he a funny man? Isn't what happened to that lady hilarious? Watch the assembled morons cheer. This is the only story now."

Complaints of judicial misconduct set off an investigation of Judge Maryanne Trump Barry. In retirement, she is no longer subject to the conduct rules. Credit Jonathan Ernst/Reuters

By Russ Buettner and Susanne Craig

April 10, 2019

President Trump's older sister, Maryanne Trump Barry, has retired as a federal appellate judge, ending an investigation into whether she violated judicial conduct rules by participating in fraudulent tax schemes with her siblings.

The court inquiry stemmed from complaints filed last October, after an investigation by The New York Times found that the Trumps had engaged in dubious tax schemes during the 1990s, including instances of outright fraud, that greatly increased the inherited wealth of Mr. Trump and his siblings. Judge Barry not only benefited financially from most of those tax schemes, The Times found; she was also in a position to influence the actions taken by her family.

Judge Barry, now 82, has not heard cases in more than two years but was still listed as an inactive senior judge, one step short of full retirement. In a letter dated Feb. 1, a court official notified the four individuals who had filed the complaints that the investigation was “receiving the full attention” of a judicial conduct council. Ten days later, Judge Barry filed her retirement papers.

The status change rendered the investigation moot, since retired judges are not subject to the conduct rules. The people who filed the complaints were notified last week that the matter had been dropped without a finding on the merits of the allegations. The decision has not yet been made public, but copies were provided to The Times by two of the complainants. Both are involved in the legal profession.

Judge Barry did not respond to emails or telephone messages left at her Manhattan apartment.

Judicial council reviews can result in the censure or reprimand of federal judges, and in extremely rare cases, a referral to the House of Representatives for impeachment.

In retirement, Judge Barry is entitled to receive annually the salary she earned when she last met certain workload requirements. Though the exact figure was not immediately available, it appears to be between $184,500 and $217,600.

The Times investigation focused on how the profits and ownership of the real estate empire built by the president’s father, Fred C. Trump, were transferred to Donald J. Trump and his siblings, often in ways designed to dodge gift and estate taxes.

A lawyer for the president, Charles J. Harder, said last fall, “The New York Times’s allegations of fraud and tax evasion are 100 percent false, and highly defamatory.”

Judge Barry had been a co-owner of a shell company — All County Building Supply & Maintenance — created by the family to siphon cash from their father’s empire by marking up purchases already made by his employees, The Times investigation found. Judge Barry, her siblings and a cousin split the markup, free of gift and estate taxes, which at the time were levied at a much higher rate than income taxes.

2:04How the Trumps Held On to Generational Wealth

By the end of 1997, Donald Trump and his siblings owned nearly all of Fred Trump's empire, free and clear of estate taxes. How did they do it? A special type of trust with a clunky acronym: GRAT, short for grantor-retained annuity trust. It is one of the tax code's great gifts to the ultrawealthy.

On a financial disclosure form filed in 1999, Judge Barry noted that her share of the All County profits for the previous 17 months totaled just over $1 million.

The family also used the padded invoices to justify higher rent increases in rent-regulated buildings, artificially inflating the rents of thousands of tenants. Former prosecutors told The Times that if the authorities had discovered at the time how the Trumps were using All County, their actions would have warranted a criminal investigation for defrauding tenants, tax fraud and filing false documents.

Similarly, Judge Barry benefited from the gross undervaluation of her father's properties when she and her siblings took ownership of them through a trust, sparing them from paying tens of millions of dollars in taxes, The Times found. For years, she attended regular briefings at her brother's offices in Trump Tower to hear updates on the real estate portfolio and to collect her share of the profits. When the siblings sold off their father's empire, between 2004 and 2006, her share of the windfall was $182.5 million, The Times found.

Judge Barry was nominated to the Federal District Court in New Jersey by President Ronald Reagan in 1983, after several years as a federal prosecutor. She was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by President Bill Clinton in 1999.

In February 2017, shortly after her brother's inauguration, she notified the court that she would stop hearing cases and give up her staff and chambers. She was then considered a senior inactive judge, a status that did not entitle her to salary increases, but that left her still subject to conduct inquiries. Judge Barry did not announce a reason for the change at the time.

Following confidentiality requirements, Judge Barry's name does not appear on the order ending the investigation or the correspondence with the complainants. The order identifies the judge in question as a senior inactive judge, about whom complaints were filed in October 2018. Under court rules, all complaints are reviewed by a judge, and those with an allegation of misconduct or disability are generally referred to a panel of judges for investigation.

Robin Alperstein wrote:

Two things are happening simultaneously in front of our eyes, and they are interconnected, terrifying, and enraging.

The first is that Trump is unraveling, becoming more unhinged and erratic almost by the day. He is in open cognitive decline. You don't have to be a shrink or neuropsychologist to see it. That cognitive decline -- which is occurring under a microscope before a world audience of billions -- would be scary and destabilizing enough on its own; but married to the character traits of a sociopath, it is incredibly dangerous. The rage and lack of capacity, the flailing, the insults, the paranoia, the self-aggrandizement, the raw hatred, the lies, the attacks on others, the rejection of truth and attacks on the most basic of democratic institutions, the vindictiveness and pettiness, the frothing obsession over his own illegitimacy....These are all getting worse and worse, in plain sight.

The second is that the GOP has coalesced further around Trump and even those who some of us thought were "reachable" are doubling down in support of his assaults on fundamental precepts required for our country to function as a democratic state. In some ways this is, of course, a continuation of the Reagan/Bush projects, of Newt Gingrich, and of Mitch McConnell's rejection of democracy when Obama was elected. But still there was some residual hope or belief that at least some of these GOP Congress people would act to preserve the Congress as a co-equal branch of government, abide by the Constitution, protect this country from foreign enemies and influence, repel fascism, and reject the forces of darkness that are rising across Europe, South America, and elsewhere.

But as Trump's depredations and Constitutional violations and lies have increased and worsened, as the devolution continues, and our norms are shattered with impunity, the GOP has not said "no." It has not said "enough is enough." There is no McCarthy moment that is going to happen.

And no matter how unhinged, how patently unfit, how incompetent, how erratic, how vile, how cruel, how dangerous, or how criminal Trump's conduct appears to be, they will close their ranks and defend him. They will support Barr's cover-up and declare "Mission Accomplished"; they will defend ripping children from their parents' arms; they will support his dismantling of the FBI's domestic terrorism unit even as Trump inspires such terrorists at home and abroad; they will fight against the Violence Against Women Act as they support an admitted and accused sexual assaulter and seek to strip women of any control over their own bodies and lives; they will rubber-stamp religious fanatics and extremists whose views are rejected by 80% of Americans into lifelong positions from which they can tyrannize the rest of the country; they will sabotage any and all efforts to protect the planet; they will refuse to bring to a vote critical reforms necessary to remove the pernicious and undemocratic influence of big money and corporations and foreigners from our elections; they will not protect our voting machines and will continue to actively prevent people from voting; they will let critical appointments go unfilled or staffed by corrupt stooges that Putin would salivate over.

And they will gaslight us all and pretend this is normal; they will attack Democrats as "partisans" for daring to believe that a monster like Trump should not be above the law; that it is fine to let his unqualified children into the government and have security clearances over everyone's objection; they will refuse to permit or join in necessary examination into the ways in which the Trump crime family's business interests now substitute for foreign policy.

And no matter how insane he acts, no matter how he treats everyone but his cult as an enemy to be attacked rather than as citizens whom he has a Constitutional obligation to protect, the worse he behaves, it is clear there will be no 25th Amendment solution. They will defend his cognition just as they defend his attacks on children, the Democrats, women, POC, immigrants, the LGBTQIA community, the disabled, the press, and truth. They will lie for him, they will cheat for him, because he is them and they are him. And they will do everything in their power to ensure that Trump and his family are never held accountable. And mocking Trump for saying "oranges" instead of "origins" isn't funny -- he is losing his ability to speak because he has dementia. But you'll never hear the GOP admit that.

Things were bad before but they are getting worse because Trump is emboldened, and so is his party. The government is run by monsters like Stephen Miller, a creature so debased and straight out of central casting he is practically a mirage, and by corrupt arrogant bastards like Mnuchin and Ross and McConnell, and by lickspittles like Graham and Barr and Pence whose servile prostration before Trump would be comical were it not so nauseating and dangerous. Not one has a shred of integrity; not one puts the Constitution or the country first.

I see a lot of people turning away in disgust from the news, from Twitter, from FB, from conversation, and, also from ACTION. I see fear and despair. And so much exhaustion.

I share these feelings. This past week, with Barr's testimony and the state-level efforts to criminalize abortion and the disrespect of Mnuchin for Waters and the rank imbecility of that moronic rep toward John Kerry and the attacks on Schiff and the odious criminal Netanyahu's re-election, I have wanted to disappear or close my eyes or just pretend this is not our world.

But it is. And it can get far worse; that is what the GOP across the country with Trump at its helm is trying to do. It is going to continue to get worse and there is no easy fix for our broken political system.

We have two choices. Fight; or give up and let them win.

Fighting doesn't guarantee our victory. But giving up guarantees theirs.

I am deeply conscious of the privilege that lets me feel that I am "fighting" -- I can physically and financially show up in ways that many others can't. But yet I don't do nearly enough; nothing I do is ever enough; nothing can ever be enough. And sometimes it feels futile and hopeless, and I don't think "the need for self-care" is a good enough excuse for not doing more. I know I need to do more. And when I am tired I think about how I will feel when things get even worse if I did nothing to try to stop it. When my children or grandchildren ask me, "what did you do to stop Trump?" at least I will have a decent answer for them. I will have a list.

And I think that if we all recognize that there are no saviors, no magic, easy fixes, no clean cure for the GOP's rot or its supporters' racism and misogyny or just pure unadulterated selfishness, if we just recognize that each of us has it in us to do something, something more than just vote, and maybe to find a single project to work on to support NOW, not a year from now, not six weeks before the election, not the weekend before the elections, but now, this year, and all year long, we will be able to save ourselves the way we started to in 2018. But our odds will be worse; Trump and the GOP will be further entrenched in their descent into fascism, and their assaults on democracy will be even further normalized. They push back and fight against every gain we make, they obstruct all progress. This is not a one-off fight. And it sucks. We should not have to fight all the time, all the time, for decency, or for our lives. But this is how the marginalized in this country have lived their lives, always: assaulted, gaslighted, fighting to take up space, to be allowed autonomy, to count. This is what BLM is about. Trump and the GOP have made it crystal clear that, in fact, very few lives matter to them; and most of those lives are rich and white and male and straight and donate to the GOP.

Many of us are not used to living this way. It's a horrible way to live, but people adapt, don't they? They become inured or they fight. Or both.

I refuse to become inured. I hope you will do the same.

NYMAG.COM MUELLER REPORT CONFIRMS TRUMP RUNS THE WHITE HOUSE LIKE IT'S THE MAFIA

Donald Trump is running the American government like a business – or, if we're being precise, like a criminal enterprise.

The president's penchant for asking himself, "What would Roy Cohn advise John Gotti to do?" has been clear for some time. Last August, Trump said of the possibility that Michael Cohen would cooperate with Robert Mueller's investigation, "I know all about flipping. It should almost be illegal." Around that same time, the president insisted that his White House counsel, Don McGahn, was not a "a John Dean type 'RAT'" — a reference to President Nixon's lawyer, who testified (truthfully) about his boss's attempts to obstruct justice. And Trump has repeatedly argued that the U.S. attorney general's primary responsibility is to demonstrate unflinching loyalty to the president, as though the federal government was the Mafia and Trump its godfather. Thus, Robert Mueller's investigation was never going to reveal that the leader of the free world thinks like a mobster, as that was something we already knew. Nevertheless, the special counsel's report does confirm that fact by detailing three previously unreported instances in which the president's behavior was indistinguishable from that of a mafioso:

The president berated the White House counsel for keeping records on their interactions because “lawyers don’t take notes.”

In June 2017, Trump directed Don McGahn to have Robert Mueller fired. McGahn then let it be known that he would resign before carrying out such an order.

By the following January, the New York Times had gotten wind of that conversation. And when the paper’s story hit newsstands, Trump ordered McGahn to dispute the report. McGahn refused. In a tense Oval Office meeting, Trump further pressured the White House counsel to dispute the Times story — and then asked McGahn about his recent conversations with Mueller’s office. A very mobster-esque exchange ensued:

The President also asked McGahn in the meeting why he had told Special Counsel’s Office investigators that the President had told him to have the Special Counsel removed. McGahn responded that he had to and that his conversations with the President were not protected by attorney-client privilege. The President then asked, “What about these notes? Why do you take notes? Lawyers don’t take notes. I never had a lawyer who took notes.” McGahn responded that he keeps notes because he is a “real lawyer” and explained that notes create a record and are not a bad thing. The President said, “I’ve had a lot of great lawyers, like Roy Cohn. He did not take notes.”

The president once refused to look at evidence of his underlings’ misdeeds lest he end up knowing too much.

In June 2017, Trump learned of the existence of the (now infamous) emails in which his eldest son arranged a meeting with purported Russian operatives at Trump Tower the previous summer (“If it’s what you say I love it”). Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner then tried to fill in the president on documents ostensibly related to that meeting. Trump demurred:

Communications advisors Hope Hicks and Josh Raffel recalled discussing with Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump that the emails were damaging and would inevitably be leaked. Hicks and Raffel advised that the best strategy was to proactively release the emails to the press. On or about June 22, 2017, Hicks attended a meeting in the White House residence with the President, Kushner, and Ivanka Trump.

According to Hicks, Kushner said that he wanted to fill the President in on something that had been discovered in the documents he was to provide to the congressional committees involving a meeting with him, Manafort, and Trump Jr. Kushner brought a folder of documents to the meeting and tried to show them to the President, but the President stopped Kushner and said he did not want to know about it, shutting the conversation down. [my emphasis]

After Michael Flynn refused to brief Trump on what he had told federal authorities, Trump's personal lawyer informed Flynn that the president would take note of his "hostility."

In November 2017, Trump's former national security adviser Michael Flynn started cooperating with the special counsel, and withdrew from a joint defense agreement he'd struck with the president. Hours after Trump learned of Flynn's decision, his personal lawyer left a voice-mail for Flynn's counsel:

I understand your situation, but let me see if I can't state it in starker terms ... [I]t wouldn't surprise me if you've gone on to make a deal with ... the government ... [I]f ... there's information that implicates the President, then we've got a national security issue ... so, you know ... we need some kind of heads up. Um, just for the sake of protecting all our interests if we can [R]emember what we've always said about the President and his feelings toward Flynn and that still remains.

Flynn's counsel then informed the president's attorney that it could not provide Trump with such a "heads up." Trump's counsel responded by warning that he would inform the boss of Flynn's "hostility."

Learn More »

The President's personal counsel said that he interpreted what they said to him as a reflection of Flynn's hostility towards the President and that he planned to inform his client of that interpretation. Flynn's attorneys understood that statement to be an attempt to make them reconsider their position because the President's personal counsel believed that Flynn would be disturbed to know that such a message would be conveyed to the President. [my emphasis]

These anecdotes do not prove that Trump committed obstruction of justice, much less that he participated in a criminal conspiracy with the Russian government. But, assuming that we all agree the American government should not be run like a criminal business, these excerpts alone establish that Congress should not allow Donald Trump to continue being president.

Trump's cognitive deficits seem worse..... he has dementia: Psychologist John Gartner

Susan Edelman Blank "Mitt Romney of Utah called reading Mueller's report "a sobering revelation of how far we have strayed from the aspirations and principles of the founders." "I am sickened at the extent and pervasiveness of dishonesty and misdirection by individuals in the highest office of the land, including the President, I am also appalled that, among other things, fellow citizens working in a campaign for president welcomed help from Russia — including information that had been illegally obtained; that none of them acted to inform American law enforcement; and that the campaign chairman was actively promoting Russian interests in Ukraine."

donny’s poem

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness ..."

"And comes now this hopeless, vicious buffoon, and the audience of equally hopeless and vicious buffoons who laughed and cheered when he made sport of a woman whose lasting memory of the trauma she suffered is the laughter of the perpetrators. Now he comes, a man swathed in scandal, with no interest beyond what he can put in his pocket and what he can put over on a universe of suckers, and he does something like this while occupying an office that we gave him, and while endowed with a public trust that he dishonors every day he wakes up in the White House.

"The scion of a multigenerational criminal enterprise, the parameters of which we are only now beginning to comprehend. A vessel for all the worst elements of the American condition. And a cheap, soulless bully besides. We never have had such a cheap counterfeit of a president* as currently occupies the office. We never have had a president* so completely deserving of scorn and yet so small in the office that it almost seems a waste of time and energy to summon up the requisite contempt.

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness, and who cannot find in himself the decency simply to shut up even when it is in his best interest to do so. Presidents don't have to be heroes to be good presidents. They just have to realize that their humanity is our common humanity and that their political commonwealth is our political commonwealth, too.

Watch him behind the seal of the President of the United States. Isn't he a funny man? Isn't what happened to that lady hilarious? Watch the assembled morons cheer. This is the only story now."

Complaints of judicial misconduct set off an investigation of Judge Maryanne Trump Barry. In retirement, she is no longer subject to the conduct rules. Credit Jonathan Ernst/Reuters

By Russ Buettner and Susanne Craig

April 10, 2019

President Trump's older sister, Maryanne Trump Barry, has retired as a federal appellate judge, ending an investigation into whether she violated judicial conduct rules by participating in fraudulent tax schemes with her siblings.

The court inquiry stemmed from complaints filed last October, after an investigation by The New York Times found that the Trumps had engaged in dubious tax schemes during the 1990s, including instances of outright fraud, that greatly increased the inherited wealth of Mr. Trump and his siblings. Judge Barry not only benefited financially from most of those tax schemes, The Times found; she was also in a position to influence the actions taken by her family.

Judge Barry, now 82, has not heard cases in more than two years but was still listed as an inactive senior judge, one step short of full retirement. In a letter dated Feb. 1, a court official notified the four individuals who had filed the complaints that the investigation was “receiving the full attention” of a judicial conduct council. Ten days later, Judge Barry filed her retirement papers.

The status change rendered the investigation moot, since retired judges are not subject to the conduct rules. The people who filed the complaints were notified last week that the matter had been dropped without a finding on the merits of the allegations. The decision has not yet been made public, but copies were provided to The Times by two of the complainants. Both are involved in the legal profession.

Judge Barry did not respond to emails or telephone messages left at her Manhattan apartment.

Judicial council reviews can result in the censure or reprimand of federal judges, and in extremely rare cases, a referral to the House of Representatives for impeachment.

In retirement, Judge Barry is entitled to receive annually the salary she earned when she last met certain workload requirements. Though the exact figure was not immediately available, it appears to be between $184,500 and $217,600.

The Times investigation focused on how the profits and ownership of the real estate empire built by the president’s father, Fred C. Trump, were transferred to Donald J. Trump and his siblings, often in ways designed to dodge gift and estate taxes.

A lawyer for the president, Charles J. Harder, said last fall, “The New York Times’s allegations of fraud and tax evasion are 100 percent false, and highly defamatory.”

Judge Barry had been a co-owner of a shell company — All County Building Supply & Maintenance — created by the family to siphon cash from their father’s empire by marking up purchases already made by his employees, The Times investigation found. Judge Barry, her siblings and a cousin split the markup, free of gift and estate taxes, which at the time were levied at a much higher rate than income taxes.

2:04How the Trumps Held On to Generational Wealth

By the end of 1997, Donald Trump and his siblings owned nearly all of Fred Trump's empire, free and clear of estate taxes. How did they do it? A special type of trust with a clunky acronym: GRAT, short for grantor-retained annuity trust. It is one of the tax code's great gifts to the ultrawealthy.

On a financial disclosure form filed in 1999, Judge Barry noted that her share of the All County profits for the previous 17 months totaled just over $1 million.

The family also used the padded invoices to justify higher rent increases in rent-regulated buildings, artificially inflating the rents of thousands of tenants. Former prosecutors told The Times that if the authorities had discovered at the time how the Trumps were using All County, their actions would have warranted a criminal investigation for defrauding tenants, tax fraud and filing false documents.

Similarly, Judge Barry benefited from the gross undervaluation of her father's properties when she and her siblings took ownership of them through a trust, sparing them from paying tens of millions of dollars in taxes, The Times found. For years, she attended regular briefings at her brother's offices in Trump Tower to hear updates on the real estate portfolio and to collect her share of the profits. When the siblings sold off their father's empire, between 2004 and 2006, her share of the windfall was $182.5 million, The Times found.

Judge Barry was nominated to the Federal District Court in New Jersey by President Ronald Reagan in 1983, after several years as a federal prosecutor. She was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by President Bill Clinton in 1999.

In February 2017, shortly after her brother's inauguration, she notified the court that she would stop hearing cases and give up her staff and chambers. She was then considered a senior inactive judge, a status that did not entitle her to salary increases, but that left her still subject to conduct inquiries. Judge Barry did not announce a reason for the change at the time.

Following confidentiality requirements, Judge Barry's name does not appear on the order ending the investigation or the correspondence with the complainants. The order identifies the judge in question as a senior inactive judge, about whom complaints were filed in October 2018. Under court rules, all complaints are reviewed by a judge, and those with an allegation of misconduct or disability are generally referred to a panel of judges for investigation.

Robin Alperstein wrote:

Two things are happening simultaneously in front of our eyes, and they are interconnected, terrifying, and enraging.

The first is that Trump is unraveling, becoming more unhinged and erratic almost by the day. He is in open cognitive decline. You don't have to be a shrink or neuropsychologist to see it. That cognitive decline -- which is occurring under a microscope before a world audience of billions -- would be scary and destabilizing enough on its own; but married to the character traits of a sociopath, it is incredibly dangerous. The rage and lack of capacity, the flailing, the insults, the paranoia, the self-aggrandizement, the raw hatred, the lies, the attacks on others, the rejection of truth and attacks on the most basic of democratic institutions, the vindictiveness and pettiness, the frothing obsession over his own illegitimacy....These are all getting worse and worse, in plain sight.

The second is that the GOP has coalesced further around Trump and even those who some of us thought were "reachable" are doubling down in support of his assaults on fundamental precepts required for our country to function as a democratic state. In some ways this is, of course, a continuation of the Reagan/Bush projects, of Newt Gingrich, and of Mitch McConnell's rejection of democracy when Obama was elected. But still there was some residual hope or belief that at least some of these GOP Congress people would act to preserve the Congress as a co-equal branch of government, abide by the Constitution, protect this country from foreign enemies and influence, repel fascism, and reject the forces of darkness that are rising across Europe, South America, and elsewhere.

But as Trump's depredations and Constitutional violations and lies have increased and worsened, as the devolution continues, and our norms are shattered with impunity, the GOP has not said "no." It has not said "enough is enough." There is no McCarthy moment that is going to happen.

And no matter how unhinged, how patently unfit, how incompetent, how erratic, how vile, how cruel, how dangerous, or how criminal Trump's conduct appears to be, they will close their ranks and defend him. They will support Barr's cover-up and declare "Mission Accomplished"; they will defend ripping children from their parents' arms; they will support his dismantling of the FBI's domestic terrorism unit even as Trump inspires such terrorists at home and abroad; they will fight against the Violence Against Women Act as they support an admitted and accused sexual assaulter and seek to strip women of any control over their own bodies and lives; they will rubber-stamp religious fanatics and extremists whose views are rejected by 80% of Americans into lifelong positions from which they can tyrannize the rest of the country; they will sabotage any and all efforts to protect the planet; they will refuse to bring to a vote critical reforms necessary to remove the pernicious and undemocratic influence of big money and corporations and foreigners from our elections; they will not protect our voting machines and will continue to actively prevent people from voting; they will let critical appointments go unfilled or staffed by corrupt stooges that Putin would salivate over.

And they will gaslight us all and pretend this is normal; they will attack Democrats as "partisans" for daring to believe that a monster like Trump should not be above the law; that it is fine to let his unqualified children into the government and have security clearances over everyone's objection; they will refuse to permit or join in necessary examination into the ways in which the Trump crime family's business interests now substitute for foreign policy.

And no matter how insane he acts, no matter how he treats everyone but his cult as an enemy to be attacked rather than as citizens whom he has a Constitutional obligation to protect, the worse he behaves, it is clear there will be no 25th Amendment solution. They will defend his cognition just as they defend his attacks on children, the Democrats, women, POC, immigrants, the LGBTQIA community, the disabled, the press, and truth. They will lie for him, they will cheat for him, because he is them and they are him. And they will do everything in their power to ensure that Trump and his family are never held accountable. And mocking Trump for saying "oranges" instead of "origins" isn't funny -- he is losing his ability to speak because he has dementia. But you'll never hear the GOP admit that.

Things were bad before but they are getting worse because Trump is emboldened, and so is his party. The government is run by monsters like Stephen Miller, a creature so debased and straight out of central casting he is practically a mirage, and by corrupt arrogant bastards like Mnuchin and Ross and McConnell, and by lickspittles like Graham and Barr and Pence whose servile prostration before Trump would be comical were it not so nauseating and dangerous. Not one has a shred of integrity; not one puts the Constitution or the country first.

I see a lot of people turning away in disgust from the news, from Twitter, from FB, from conversation, and, also from ACTION. I see fear and despair. And so much exhaustion.

I share these feelings. This past week, with Barr's testimony and the state-level efforts to criminalize abortion and the disrespect of Mnuchin for Waters and the rank imbecility of that moronic rep toward John Kerry and the attacks on Schiff and the odious criminal Netanyahu's re-election, I have wanted to disappear or close my eyes or just pretend this is not our world.

But it is. And it can get far worse; that is what the GOP across the country with Trump at its helm is trying to do. It is going to continue to get worse and there is no easy fix for our broken political system.

We have two choices. Fight; or give up and let them win.

Fighting doesn't guarantee our victory. But giving up guarantees theirs.

I am deeply conscious of the privilege that lets me feel that I am "fighting" -- I can physically and financially show up in ways that many others can't. But yet I don't do nearly enough; nothing I do is ever enough; nothing can ever be enough. And sometimes it feels futile and hopeless, and I don't think "the need for self-care" is a good enough excuse for not doing more. I know I need to do more. And when I am tired I think about how I will feel when things get even worse if I did nothing to try to stop it. When my children or grandchildren ask me, "what did you do to stop Trump?" at least I will have a decent answer for them. I will have a list.

And I think that if we all recognize that there are no saviors, no magic, easy fixes, no clean cure for the GOP's rot or its supporters' racism and misogyny or just pure unadulterated selfishness, if we just recognize that each of us has it in us to do something, something more than just vote, and maybe to find a single project to work on to support NOW, not a year from now, not six weeks before the election, not the weekend before the elections, but now, this year, and all year long, we will be able to save ourselves the way we started to in 2018. But our odds will be worse; Trump and the GOP will be further entrenched in their descent into fascism, and their assaults on democracy will be even further normalized. They push back and fight against every gain we make, they obstruct all progress. This is not a one-off fight. And it sucks. We should not have to fight all the time, all the time, for decency, or for our lives. But this is how the marginalized in this country have lived their lives, always: assaulted, gaslighted, fighting to take up space, to be allowed autonomy, to count. This is what BLM is about. Trump and the GOP have made it crystal clear that, in fact, very few lives matter to them; and most of those lives are rich and white and male and straight and donate to the GOP.

Many of us are not used to living this way. It's a horrible way to live, but people adapt, don't they? They become inured or they fight. Or both.

I refuse to become inured. I hope you will do the same.

donny’s poem

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness ..."

"And comes now this hopeless, vicious buffoon, and the audience of equally hopeless and vicious buffoons who laughed and cheered when he made sport of a woman whose lasting memory of the trauma she suffered is the laughter of the perpetrators. Now he comes, a man swathed in scandal, with no interest beyond what he can put in his pocket and what he can put over on a universe of suckers, and he does something like this while occupying an office that we gave him, and while endowed with a public trust that he dishonors every day he wakes up in the White House.

"The scion of a multigenerational criminal enterprise, the parameters of which we are only now beginning to comprehend. A vessel for all the worst elements of the American condition. And a cheap, soulless bully besides. We never have had such a cheap counterfeit of a president* as currently occupies the office. We never have had a president* so completely deserving of scorn and yet so small in the office that it almost seems a waste of time and energy to summon up the requisite contempt.

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness, and who cannot find in himself the decency simply to shut up even when it is in his best interest to do so. Presidents don't have to be heroes to be good presidents. They just have to realize that their humanity is our common humanity and that their political commonwealth is our political commonwealth, too.

Watch him behind the seal of the President of the United States. Isn't he a funny man? Isn't what happened to that lady hilarious? Watch the assembled morons cheer. This is the only story now."

By Russ Buettner and Susanne Craig

April 10, 2019

President Trump's older sister, Maryanne Trump Barry, has retired as a federal appellate judge, ending an investigation into whether she violated judicial conduct rules by participating in fraudulent tax schemes with her siblings.

The court inquiry stemmed from complaints filed last October, after an investigation by The New York Times found that the Trumps had engaged in dubious tax schemes during the 1990s, including instances of outright fraud, that greatly increased the inherited wealth of Mr. Trump and his siblings. Judge Barry not only benefited financially from most of those tax schemes, The Times found; she was also in a position to influence the actions taken by her family.

Judge Barry, now 82, has not heard cases in more than two years but was still listed as an inactive senior judge, one step short of full retirement. In a letter dated Feb. 1, a court official notified the four individuals who had filed the complaints that the investigation was “receiving the full attention” of a judicial conduct council. Ten days later, Judge Barry filed her retirement papers.

The status change rendered the investigation moot, since retired judges are not subject to the conduct rules. The people who filed the complaints were notified last week that the matter had been dropped without a finding on the merits of the allegations. The decision has not yet been made public, but copies were provided to The Times by two of the complainants. Both are involved in the legal profession.

Judge Barry did not respond to emails or telephone messages left at her Manhattan apartment.

Judicial council reviews can result in the censure or reprimand of federal judges, and in extremely rare cases, a referral to the House of Representatives for impeachment.

In retirement, Judge Barry is entitled to receive annually the salary she earned when she last met certain workload requirements. Though the exact figure was not immediately available, it appears to be between $184,500 and $217,600.

The Times investigation focused on how the profits and ownership of the real estate empire built by the president’s father, Fred C. Trump, were transferred to Donald J. Trump and his siblings, often in ways designed to dodge gift and estate taxes.

A lawyer for the president, Charles J. Harder, said last fall, “The New York Times’s allegations of fraud and tax evasion are 100 percent false, and highly defamatory.”

Judge Barry had been a co-owner of a shell company — All County Building Supply & Maintenance — created by the family to siphon cash from their father’s empire by marking up purchases already made by his employees, The Times investigation found. Judge Barry, her siblings and a cousin split the markup, free of gift and estate taxes, which at the time were levied at a much higher rate than income taxes.

2:04How the Trumps Held On to Generational Wealth

By the end of 1997, Donald Trump and his siblings owned nearly all of Fred Trump's empire, free and clear of estate taxes. How did they do it? A special type of trust with a clunky acronym: GRAT, short for grantor-retained annuity trust. It is one of the tax code's great gifts to the ultrawealthy.

On a financial disclosure form filed in 1999, Judge Barry noted that her share of the All County profits for the previous 17 months totaled just over $1 million.

The family also used the padded invoices to justify higher rent increases in rent-regulated buildings, artificially inflating the rents of thousands of tenants. Former prosecutors told The Times that if the authorities had discovered at the time how the Trumps were using All County, their actions would have warranted a criminal investigation for defrauding tenants, tax fraud and filing false documents.

Similarly, Judge Barry benefited from the gross undervaluation of her father's properties when she and her siblings took ownership of them through a trust, sparing them from paying tens of millions of dollars in taxes, The Times found. For years, she attended regular briefings at her brother's offices in Trump Tower to hear updates on the real estate portfolio and to collect her share of the profits. When the siblings sold off their father's empire, between 2004 and 2006, her share of the windfall was $182.5 million, The Times found.

Judge Barry was nominated to the Federal District Court in New Jersey by President Ronald Reagan in 1983, after several years as a federal prosecutor. She was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by President Bill Clinton in 1999.

In February 2017, shortly after her brother's inauguration, she notified the court that she would stop hearing cases and give up her staff and chambers. She was then considered a senior inactive judge, a status that did not entitle her to salary increases, but that left her still subject to conduct inquiries. Judge Barry did not announce a reason for the change at the time.

Following confidentiality requirements, Judge Barry's name does not appear on the order ending the investigation or the correspondence with the complainants. The order identifies the judge in question as a senior inactive judge, about whom complaints were filed in October 2018. Under court rules, all complaints are reviewed by a judge, and those with an allegation of misconduct or disability are generally referred to a panel of judges for investigation.

Robin Alperstein wrote:

Two things are happening simultaneously in front of our eyes, and they are interconnected, terrifying, and enraging.

The first is that Trump is unraveling, becoming more unhinged and erratic almost by the day. He is in open cognitive decline. You don't have to be a shrink or neuropsychologist to see it. That cognitive decline -- which is occurring under a microscope before a world audience of billions -- would be scary and destabilizing enough on its own; but married to the character traits of a sociopath, it is incredibly dangerous. The rage and lack of capacity, the flailing, the insults, the paranoia, the self-aggrandizement, the raw hatred, the lies, the attacks on others, the rejection of truth and attacks on the most basic of democratic institutions, the vindictiveness and pettiness, the frothing obsession over his own illegitimacy....These are all getting worse and worse, in plain sight.

The second is that the GOP has coalesced further around Trump and even those who some of us thought were "reachable" are doubling down in support of his assaults on fundamental precepts required for our country to function as a democratic state. In some ways this is, of course, a continuation of the Reagan/Bush projects, of Newt Gingrich, and of Mitch McConnell's rejection of democracy when Obama was elected. But still there was some residual hope or belief that at least some of these GOP Congress people would act to preserve the Congress as a co-equal branch of government, abide by the Constitution, protect this country from foreign enemies and influence, repel fascism, and reject the forces of darkness that are rising across Europe, South America, and elsewhere.

But as Trump's depredations and Constitutional violations and lies have increased and worsened, as the devolution continues, and our norms are shattered with impunity, the GOP has not said "no." It has not said "enough is enough." There is no McCarthy moment that is going to happen.

And no matter how unhinged, how patently unfit, how incompetent, how erratic, how vile, how cruel, how dangerous, or how criminal Trump's conduct appears to be, they will close their ranks and defend him. They will support Barr's cover-up and declare "Mission Accomplished"; they will defend ripping children from their parents' arms; they will support his dismantling of the FBI's domestic terrorism unit even as Trump inspires such terrorists at home and abroad; they will fight against the Violence Against Women Act as they support an admitted and accused sexual assaulter and seek to strip women of any control over their own bodies and lives; they will rubber-stamp religious fanatics and extremists whose views are rejected by 80% of Americans into lifelong positions from which they can tyrannize the rest of the country; they will sabotage any and all efforts to protect the planet; they will refuse to bring to a vote critical reforms necessary to remove the pernicious and undemocratic influence of big money and corporations and foreigners from our elections; they will not protect our voting machines and will continue to actively prevent people from voting; they will let critical appointments go unfilled or staffed by corrupt stooges that Putin would salivate over.

And they will gaslight us all and pretend this is normal; they will attack Democrats as "partisans" for daring to believe that a monster like Trump should not be above the law; that it is fine to let his unqualified children into the government and have security clearances over everyone's objection; they will refuse to permit or join in necessary examination into the ways in which the Trump crime family's business interests now substitute for foreign policy.

And no matter how insane he acts, no matter how he treats everyone but his cult as an enemy to be attacked rather than as citizens whom he has a Constitutional obligation to protect, the worse he behaves, it is clear there will be no 25th Amendment solution. They will defend his cognition just as they defend his attacks on children, the Democrats, women, POC, immigrants, the LGBTQIA community, the disabled, the press, and truth. They will lie for him, they will cheat for him, because he is them and they are him. And they will do everything in their power to ensure that Trump and his family are never held accountable. And mocking Trump for saying "oranges" instead of "origins" isn't funny -- he is losing his ability to speak because he has dementia. But you'll never hear the GOP admit that.

Things were bad before but they are getting worse because Trump is emboldened, and so is his party. The government is run by monsters like Stephen Miller, a creature so debased and straight out of central casting he is practically a mirage, and by corrupt arrogant bastards like Mnuchin and Ross and McConnell, and by lickspittles like Graham and Barr and Pence whose servile prostration before Trump would be comical were it not so nauseating and dangerous. Not one has a shred of integrity; not one puts the Constitution or the country first.

I see a lot of people turning away in disgust from the news, from Twitter, from FB, from conversation, and, also from ACTION. I see fear and despair. And so much exhaustion.

I share these feelings. This past week, with Barr's testimony and the state-level efforts to criminalize abortion and the disrespect of Mnuchin for Waters and the rank imbecility of that moronic rep toward John Kerry and the attacks on Schiff and the odious criminal Netanyahu's re-election, I have wanted to disappear or close my eyes or just pretend this is not our world.

But it is. And it can get far worse; that is what the GOP across the country with Trump at its helm is trying to do. It is going to continue to get worse and there is no easy fix for our broken political system.

We have two choices. Fight; or give up and let them win.

Fighting doesn't guarantee our victory. But giving up guarantees theirs.

I am deeply conscious of the privilege that lets me feel that I am "fighting" -- I can physically and financially show up in ways that many others can't. But yet I don't do nearly enough; nothing I do is ever enough; nothing can ever be enough. And sometimes it feels futile and hopeless, and I don't think "the need for self-care" is a good enough excuse for not doing more. I know I need to do more. And when I am tired I think about how I will feel when things get even worse if I did nothing to try to stop it. When my children or grandchildren ask me, "what did you do to stop Trump?" at least I will have a decent answer for them. I will have a list.

And I think that if we all recognize that there are no saviors, no magic, easy fixes, no clean cure for the GOP's rot or its supporters' racism and misogyny or just pure unadulterated selfishness, if we just recognize that each of us has it in us to do something, something more than just vote, and maybe to find a single project to work on to support NOW, not a year from now, not six weeks before the election, not the weekend before the elections, but now, this year, and all year long, we will be able to save ourselves the way we started to in 2018. But our odds will be worse; Trump and the GOP will be further entrenched in their descent into fascism, and their assaults on democracy will be even further normalized. They push back and fight against every gain we make, they obstruct all progress. This is not a one-off fight. And it sucks. We should not have to fight all the time, all the time, for decency, or for our lives. But this is how the marginalized in this country have lived their lives, always: assaulted, gaslighted, fighting to take up space, to be allowed autonomy, to count. This is what BLM is about. Trump and the GOP have made it crystal clear that, in fact, very few lives matter to them; and most of those lives are rich and white and male and straight and donate to the GOP.

Many of us are not used to living this way. It's a horrible way to live, but people adapt, don't they? They become inured or they fight. Or both.

I refuse to become inured. I hope you will do the same.

"And comes now this hopeless, vicious buffoon, and the audience of equally hopeless and vicious buffoons who laughed and cheered when he made sport of a woman whose lasting memory of the trauma she suffered is the laughter of the perpetrators. Now he comes, a man swathed in scandal, with no interest beyond what he can put in his pocket and what he can put over on a universe of suckers, and he does something like this while occupying an office that we gave him, and while endowed with a public trust that he dishonors every day he wakes up in the White House.

"The scion of a multigenerational criminal enterprise, the parameters of which we are only now beginning to comprehend. A vessel for all the worst elements of the American condition. And a cheap, soulless bully besides. We never have had such a cheap counterfeit of a president* as currently occupies the office. We never have had a president* so completely deserving of scorn and yet so small in the office that it almost seems a waste of time and energy to summon up the requisite contempt.

"Watch how a republic dies in the empty eyes of an empty man who feels nothing but his own imaginary greatness, and who cannot find in himself the decency simply to shut up even when it is in his best interest to do so. Presidents don't have to be heroes to be good presidents. They just have to realize that their humanity is our common humanity and that their political commonwealth is our political commonwealth, too.

Watch him behind the seal of the President of the United States. Isn't he a funny man? Isn't what happened to that lady hilarious? Watch the assembled morons cheer. This is the only story now."

By Russ Buettner and Susanne Craig

April 10, 2019

President Trump's older sister, Maryanne Trump Barry, has retired as a federal appellate judge, ending an investigation into whether she violated judicial conduct rules by participating in fraudulent tax schemes with her siblings.

The court inquiry stemmed from complaints filed last October, after an investigation by The New York Times found that the Trumps had engaged in dubious tax schemes during the 1990s, including instances of outright fraud, that greatly increased the inherited wealth of Mr. Trump and his siblings. Judge Barry not only benefited financially from most of those tax schemes, The Times found; she was also in a position to influence the actions taken by her family.

Judge Barry, now 82, has not heard cases in more than two years but was still listed as an inactive senior judge, one step short of full retirement. In a letter dated Feb. 1, a court official notified the four individuals who had filed the complaints that the investigation was “receiving the full attention” of a judicial conduct council. Ten days later, Judge Barry filed her retirement papers.

The status change rendered the investigation moot, since retired judges are not subject to the conduct rules. The people who filed the complaints were notified last week that the matter had been dropped without a finding on the merits of the allegations. The decision has not yet been made public, but copies were provided to The Times by two of the complainants. Both are involved in the legal profession.

Judge Barry did not respond to emails or telephone messages left at her Manhattan apartment.

Judicial council reviews can result in the censure or reprimand of federal judges, and in extremely rare cases, a referral to the House of Representatives for impeachment.

In retirement, Judge Barry is entitled to receive annually the salary she earned when she last met certain workload requirements. Though the exact figure was not immediately available, it appears to be between $184,500 and $217,600.

The Times investigation focused on how the profits and ownership of the real estate empire built by the president’s father, Fred C. Trump, were transferred to Donald J. Trump and his siblings, often in ways designed to dodge gift and estate taxes.

A lawyer for the president, Charles J. Harder, said last fall, “The New York Times’s allegations of fraud and tax evasion are 100 percent false, and highly defamatory.”

Judge Barry had been a co-owner of a shell company — All County Building Supply & Maintenance — created by the family to siphon cash from their father’s empire by marking up purchases already made by his employees, The Times investigation found. Judge Barry, her siblings and a cousin split the markup, free of gift and estate taxes, which at the time were levied at a much higher rate than income taxes.

2:04How the Trumps Held On to Generational Wealth

By the end of 1997, Donald Trump and his siblings owned nearly all of Fred Trump's empire, free and clear of estate taxes. How did they do it? A special type of trust with a clunky acronym: GRAT, short for grantor-retained annuity trust. It is one of the tax code's great gifts to the ultrawealthy.

On a financial disclosure form filed in 1999, Judge Barry noted that her share of the All County profits for the previous 17 months totaled just over $1 million.

The family also used the padded invoices to justify higher rent increases in rent-regulated buildings, artificially inflating the rents of thousands of tenants. Former prosecutors told The Times that if the authorities had discovered at the time how the Trumps were using All County, their actions would have warranted a criminal investigation for defrauding tenants, tax fraud and filing false documents.

Similarly, Judge Barry benefited from the gross undervaluation of her father's properties when she and her siblings took ownership of them through a trust, sparing them from paying tens of millions of dollars in taxes, The Times found. For years, she attended regular briefings at her brother's offices in Trump Tower to hear updates on the real estate portfolio and to collect her share of the profits. When the siblings sold off their father's empire, between 2004 and 2006, her share of the windfall was $182.5 million, The Times found.

Judge Barry was nominated to the Federal District Court in New Jersey by President Ronald Reagan in 1983, after several years as a federal prosecutor. She was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by President Bill Clinton in 1999.

In February 2017, shortly after her brother's inauguration, she notified the court that she would stop hearing cases and give up her staff and chambers. She was then considered a senior inactive judge, a status that did not entitle her to salary increases, but that left her still subject to conduct inquiries. Judge Barry did not announce a reason for the change at the time.

Following confidentiality requirements, Judge Barry's name does not appear on the order ending the investigation or the correspondence with the complainants. The order identifies the judge in question as a senior inactive judge, about whom complaints were filed in October 2018. Under court rules, all complaints are reviewed by a judge, and those with an allegation of misconduct or disability are generally referred to a panel of judges for investigation.

Trump administration refuses to hand over documents to House oversight investigation

The Trump administration is committing "an unprecedented level of stonewalling, delay and obstruction" in response to congressional requests for documents and witnesses, the chair of the House oversight committee has said. Elijah Cummings, Democratic congressman for Maryland, said he had sent 12 letters to the White House on a range of topics from the "routine" to "relating to our core national security interests". In an op-ed for The Washington Post, Mr Cummings said the subjects included White House security clearances, Donald Trump's alleged hush money payments, and the use of taxpayer funds for lavish private planes.

Something is very wrong with Trump [Duh!] (CNN)Let's pause for a moment and consider that President Donald Trump's chief of staff Mick Mulvaney had to say on national TV that his boss is "not a white supremacist" and one of Trump's senior advisers, Kellyanne Conway, had to push back against her own husband's questioning of Trump's mental state. Over the weekend, as Trump ranted on Twitter, George Conway, who is a prominent conservative lawyer, posted the psychiatric definition of narcissistic personality disorder and asked all Americans to think about Trump's "mental condition and psychological state." Acting chief of staff: Trump is not a white supremacist Naturally, the press wanted to hear Kellyanne Conway's view. "No, I don't share those concerns," she said as she went to work at the White House on Monday. She added that she had been busy with her children and may not have been aware of all the President's recent tweets.

YALE PSYCHIATRIST: TRUMP'S "LACK OF CONSCIENCE" MAKES THE PRESIDENT "CAPABLE OF CRIMINAL ACTIVITY"

"Because he never addresses the source of his inner emptiness, it remains ever unfilled," Dr. Bandy X. Lee argues

Tana Geneva March 12, 2019 7:40PM (UTC)

This article originally appeared on Raw Story

The Republican apparatus is lining up behind Donald Trump's re-election campaign, despite the President's many legal troubles, from the Russia investigation to pay-offs to Stormy Daniels. His former campaign manager Paul Manafort and his former fixer Michael Cohen are both serving prison terms for crimes they committed while being closely associated with the Trump businesses and campaign.

Nevertheless, Trump seem eager to persevere over his Democratic challengers and is setting a harsh tone for the upcoming campaign: on Monday, he accused the party of harboring anti-Jewish sentiment.

Raw Story spoke with Dr. Bandy X. Lee, a forensic psychiatrist at Yale School of Medicine, about the current political moment, the President's mental state, and an upcoming conference by the World Mental Health Coalition, an organization of mental health experts who are seeking to eliminate the problem of dangerous disorders in leadership by offering fitness-for-duty exams.

She edited the New York Times bestseller, "The Dangerous Case of Donald Trump: 27 Psychiatrists and Mental Health Experts Assess a President," to be released in an expanded edition next week. She is the newly-appointed president of the World Mental Health Coalition, formerly the National Coalition of Concerned Mental Health Experts, which has joined with international partners to form the new organization.

Lee is organizing an interdisciplinary conference next week in Washington, DC, on the same day as the release of her new book (for more information, go to: dangerouscase.org).

Raw Story: Can you describe some of the psychological patterns you find alarming?

Certain things I cannot know without an examination, but there is a lot I can know, and with all the high-quality data that are available, I now know as much about his patterns as any patient I have ever examined. Just about every hypothesis I would have tested in an office setting has been demonstrated in real life, in real time with real consequences, and it would be dishonest for me to pretend this were not the case.

We had long been warning that psychological dangerousness in the office of the presidency would soon translate into social, cultural, and geopolitical dangerousness, and that is happening now. We have to join forces to figure out what we can do, since no one field can contain it now—not even politics can handle it, apparently. The Finnish reporter who contacted me said: “One person being deranged is understandable. We see this from time to time. What is frightening are the millions and tens of millions of people who believe this is just wonderful.” Outside observations are helpful when we start to lose our own ground.

Attendees can register online through dangerouscase.org.

The title of the conference is, “The Dangerous State of the World and the Need for Fit Leadership.” Exactly a week from today, in Washington, we will be holding a major interdisciplinary conference with the nation’s top experts from multiple fields: mental health, law, history, political science, economics, social psychology, philosophy, nuclear science, and climate science. These experts will be coming together for the first time at this urgent time, to share their knowledge with one another and with the public. This is because clear analysis of a situation is the first step toward finding an informed and effective solution.

The technology and the extensive war-making powers that are available to our president, in his unstable state, make this perhaps one of the most dangerous moments in the history of our nation and the world. Just when a correct appraisal is most urgent, expert voices are all but lacking in public discourse.

The group organizing the conference is the World Mental Health Coalition, an organization of mental health experts who are seeking to eliminate the problem of dangerous disorders in leadership by offering fitness-for-duty exams for all presidential and vice-presidential candidates. We are also recommending that all nations where the leader controls weapons of mass destruction do the same.

Politics The Independent Trump news live - President launches late-night Twitter storm as poll shows most Americans think he is a criminal Donald Trump has lashed out at a number of old enemies on Twitter overnight, including Hillary Clinton, as his frustration with House Democrats and the investigations surrounding him threatens to boil over. The president accused the Democrats of “playing games” by instigating “McCarthyite” congressional investigations against him rather than getting on with the business of government, refusing to hand over files related to his son-in-law Jared Kushner's security clearance to the House Oversight Committee and indicating he might not co-operate with the House Judiciary Committee's abuse of power investigation into his inner circle.

A former campaign aide for President Trump, one of 81 people to receive a request for documents this week from the House Judiciary Committee, has already informed the committee that he has no records responsive to their inquiries and he does not plan to testify in front of the panel.

The letter from an attorney for Michael Caputo, who worked for Trump during part of the 2016 campaign, represents the first skirmish in what is likely to be broad resistance from Trump aides and associates to new inquiries issued this week by the Judiciary Committee.

Caputo told The Washington Post that he has already begun coordinating with four other Trump associates who received requests from the committee this week to begin a joint strategy of resisting requests for testimony.

“All four are reluctant to appear because they believe it’s a perjury trap [riiiiight well, if you tell the truth, no trap] designed to move toward impeachment of the president,” he said.

Many of those who received the requests this week have already been interviewed by the House and Senate intelligence committees, as well as special counsel Robert S. Mueller III. But the Judiciary Committee, which has the power to impeach the president, has launched its own wide-ranging probe of Trump campaign aides, business associates and family members as part of what Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) said was a way to explore whether the Trump administration has abused its power. Nadler took control of the committee in January with the new Democratic majority in the House.

Caputo attorney Dennis C. Vacco indicated in the letter that a committee staffer asked whether he would be willing to testify in front of the committee, a request that has not yet been made publicly of Caputo or other potential witnesses.

Vacco wrote that he told the committee lawyer that Caputo would not commit to appear, given that he already testified in front of other congressional committees.

“We see no reason why the House Judiciary Committee cannot obtain the transcript of Mr. Caputo’s testimony” from the House Intelligence Committee, Vacco wrote.

A spokesman for the committee declined to comment on Caputo’s letter. A person familiar with the exchange said there was no formal request for Caputo’s testimony but only a casual conversation between Caputo’s lawyer and committee attorney Barry Berke.

The Judiciary Committee blitzed dozens of Trump associates with broad requests this week, rather than issuing targeted questions at individuals.

The committee asked Caputo, for instance, to produce documents related to a June 2016 meeting at Trump Tower between Donald Trump Jr. and a Russian lawyer. Caputo did not attend the meeting and, according to his attorney, has no documents about it.

It also asked him to produce records related to any Russian government contact with a long list of other Trump aides and associates. His attorney again indicated he had no responsive documents to the request.

The committee, however, did not ask Caputo about his communications with Trump adviser Roger Stone, with whom he is close. Nor was he asked about his contacts with a Russian national who contacted him in May 2016 to offer information about Hillary Clinton in exchange for money. Stone met with the man at a Miami-area restaurant, but discussions ended after he asked for $2 million for his information. Caputo and Stone have alleged that the man was working for the FBI.

Trump administration refuses to hand over documents to House oversight investigation

The Trump administration is committing "an unprecedented level of stonewalling, delay and obstruction" in response to congressional requests for documents and witnesses, the chair of the House oversight committee has said. Elijah Cummings, Democratic congressman for Maryland, said he had sent 12 letters to the White House on a range of topics from the "routine" to "relating to our core national security interests". In an op-ed for The Washington Post, Mr Cummings said the subjects included White House security clearances, Donald Trump's alleged hush money payments, and the use of taxpayer funds for lavish private planes.

George Conway, attorney and husband of White House counselor Kellyanne Conway, recently said of President Trump: “Whether or not impeachment is in order, a serious inquiry needs to be made about this man’s condition of mind.” Since then, the media have been fixated on the Twitter war between Trump and Conway, rather than on the substance of Conway’s claim about the president’s mental health. On this one, Conway is right. He is probably relying on the growing number of statements by mental health professionals saying the same thing, but not being heard very clearly in the din of daily political banter. What Trump has resurfaced in an unprecedented way for the United States is the reality that a leader’s psychological defects can put a nation and the world in danger.

Of course, the threat that psychologically dangerous leaders pose is not new. One need only look at the bloody 20th century to see that history has been profoundly shaped by a handful of leaders with dangerous psychological defects, whose unquenchable drive for power led them to attain positions of power. Joseph Stalin, Mao Zedong, Adolf Hitler, and Pol Pot are but a small sample. At times of social and political unrest, dangerous individuals may rise to power on the back of populist movements and hollow out democracies from within.

Susan Edelman Blank Public misconceptions of dangerousness First, the public often lacks an understanding of how dangerous psychological defects can be. Trump’s rantings and lies can seem amusing to some, or evidence of strength, or simply bargaining tactics. The public may not understand the dangers of his personality, which displays paranoia, cruelty toward others, and remorseless lying. Leaders with these pathologies characteristically scapegoat vulnerable minorities, equate cruelty with security, and excel in whipping up fear and hatred — all while the populace is not even aware that it is being manipulated.

Yield Curve Inversion Shows the Market Is Fake

By Ted Bauman, Editor, The Bauman Letter

The email from Banyan Hill's editorial director was unusual.

It's not often that she sends out an all-points alert at 8 a.m. on a Saturday morning.

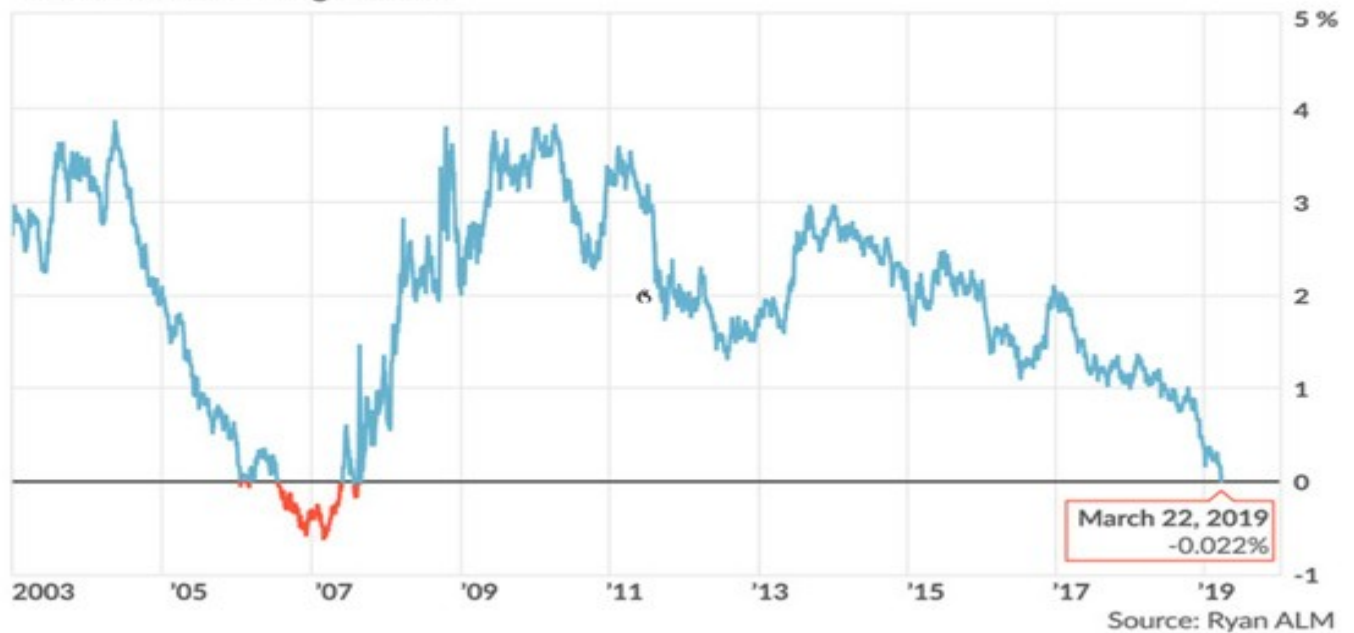

But this wasn't an ordinary Saturday.

The day before, the spread between the yield on 10-year Treasury bills and 3-month Treasury notes had inverted.

For the first time since August 2007, investors would earn less on the 10-year T-bill than on the 3-month T-note:

Spread between 10-year minus 3-month note

Narrowest since August 2007

\(Click here to view larger image.\)

Inverted yield curves have preceded the last seven U.S. recessions.

But they don't cause recessions. Rather, they are symptoms of recessionary conditions in the making.

They're so accurate at predicting bad times to come that they have roughly the same significance for financial professionals as voodoo curse totems have for followers of that religion, as I recently explained on MarketWatch.

Hence the early morning email from the head office.

I've been warning readers about the shaky foundations of the U.S. bull market for quite a while now. Alas, my predictions have finally proved accurate.

But why? How did I know this was coming ... and how can you avoid its worst effects? Read more here.

YALE PSYCHIATRIST: TRUMP'S "LACK OF CONSCIENCE" MAKES THE PRESIDENT "CAPABLE OF CRIMINAL ACTIVITY"

"Because he never addresses the source of his inner emptiness, it remains ever unfilled," Dr. Bandy X. Lee argues

Tana Geneva March 12, 2019 7:40PM (UTC)

This article originally appeared on Raw Story

The Republican apparatus is lining up behind Donald Trump's re-election campaign, despite the President's many legal troubles, from the Russia investigation to pay-offs to Stormy Daniels. His former campaign manager Paul Manafort and his former fixer Michael Cohen are both serving prison terms for crimes they committed while being closely associated with the Trump businesses and campaign.

Nevertheless, Trump seem eager to persevere over his Democratic challengers and is setting a harsh tone for the upcoming campaign: on Monday, he accused the party of harboring anti-Jewish sentiment.

Raw Story spoke with Dr. Bandy X. Lee, a forensic psychiatrist at Yale School of Medicine, about the current political moment, the President's mental state, and an upcoming conference by the World Mental Health Coalition, an organization of mental health experts who are seeking to eliminate the problem of dangerous disorders in leadership by offering fitness-for-duty exams.

She edited the New York Times bestseller, "The Dangerous Case of Donald Trump: 27 Psychiatrists and Mental Health Experts Assess a President," to be released in an expanded edition next week. She is the newly-appointed president of the World Mental Health Coalition, formerly the National Coalition of Concerned Mental Health Experts, which has joined with international partners to form the new organization.

Lee is organizing an interdisciplinary conference next week in Washington, DC, on the same day as the release of her new book (for more information, go to: dangerouscase.org).

Raw Story: Can you describe some of the psychological patterns you find alarming?

Certain things I cannot know without an examination, but there is a lot I can know, and with all the high-quality data that are available, I now know as much about his patterns as any patient I have ever examined. Just about every hypothesis I would have tested in an office setting has been demonstrated in real life, in real time with real consequences, and it would be dishonest for me to pretend this were not the case.

We had long been warning that psychological dangerousness in the office of the presidency would soon translate into social, cultural, and geopolitical dangerousness, and that is happening now. We have to join forces to figure out what we can do, since no one field can contain it now—not even politics can handle it, apparently. The Finnish reporter who contacted me said: “One person being deranged is understandable. We see this from time to time. What is frightening are the millions and tens of millions of people who believe this is just wonderful.” Outside observations are helpful when we start to lose our own ground.

Attendees can register online through dangerouscase.org.

The title of the conference is, “The Dangerous State of the World and the Need for Fit Leadership.” Exactly a week from today, in Washington, we will be holding a major interdisciplinary conference with the nation’s top experts from multiple fields: mental health, law, history, political science, economics, social psychology, philosophy, nuclear science, and climate science. These experts will be coming together for the first time at this urgent time, to share their knowledge with one another and with the public. This is because clear analysis of a situation is the first step toward finding an informed and effective solution.

The technology and the extensive war-making powers that are available to our president, in his unstable state, make this perhaps one of the most dangerous moments in the history of our nation and the world. Just when a correct appraisal is most urgent, expert voices are all but lacking in public discourse.

The group organizing the conference is the World Mental Health Coalition, an organization of mental health experts who are seeking to eliminate the problem of dangerous disorders in leadership by offering fitness-for-duty exams for all presidential and vice-presidential candidates. We are also recommending that all nations where the leader controls weapons of mass destruction do the same.

Twitter storm as poll shows most Americans think he is a criminal Donald Trump has lashed out at a number of old enemies on Twitter overnight, including Hillary Clinton, as his frustration with House Democrats and the investigations surrounding him threatens to boil over. The president accused the Democrats of “playing games” by instigating “McCarthyite” congressional investigations against him rather than getting on with the business of government, refusing to hand over files related to his son-in-law Jared Kushner's security clearance to the House Oversight Committee and indicating he might not co-operate with the House Judiciary Committee's abuse of power investigation into his inner circle.

On the day he had been due to start a three-year prison sentence after being convicted of paying hush money to two women in violation of campaign finance laws - something he claimed he did to protect Mr Trump - the Cohen completed his fourth and final day of testimony before congressional investigators. "I believe they're happy and I have given them my assurance that any additional information that they need I will continue to cooperate," the man who once bragged he would take a bullet for the president said, as he emerged from a hearing of the intelligence committee of the House of Representatives.

A former campaign aide for President Trump, one of 81 people to receive a request for documents this week from the House Judiciary Committee, has already informed the committee that he has no records responsive to their inquiries and he does not plan to testify in front of the panel.

The letter from an attorney for Michael Caputo, who worked for Trump during part of the 2016 campaign, represents the first skirmish in what is likely to be broad resistance from Trump aides and associates to new inquiries issued this week by the Judiciary Committee.

Caputo told The Washington Post that he has already begun coordinating with four other Trump associates who received requests from the committee this week to begin a joint strategy of resisting requests for testimony.

“All four are reluctant to appear because they believe it’s a perjury trap [riiiiight well, if you tell the truth, no trap] designed to move toward impeachment of the president,” he said.

Many of those who received the requests this week have already been interviewed by the House and Senate intelligence committees, as well as special counsel Robert S. Mueller III. But the Judiciary Committee, which has the power to impeach the president, has launched its own wide-ranging probe of Trump campaign aides, business associates and family members as part of what Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) said was a way to explore whether the Trump administration has abused its power. Nadler took control of the committee in January with the new Democratic majority in the House.

© Chip Somodevilla/Getty Images Former Trump campaign aide Michael Caputo arrives to testify before the House Intelligence Committee in July 2017.

Caputo attorney Dennis C. Vacco indicated in the letter that a committee staffer asked whether he would be willing to testify in front of the committee, a request that has not yet been made publicly of Caputo or other potential witnesses.

Vacco wrote that he told the committee lawyer that Caputo would not commit to appear, given that he already testified in front of other congressional committees.

“We see no reason why the House Judiciary Committee cannot obtain the transcript of Mr. Caputo’s testimony” from the House Intelligence Committee, Vacco wrote.

A spokesman for the committee declined to comment on Caputo’s letter. A person familiar with the exchange said there was no formal request for Caputo’s testimony but only a casual conversation between Caputo’s lawyer and committee attorney Barry Berke.

The Judiciary Committee blitzed dozens of Trump associates with broad requests this week, rather than issuing targeted questions at individuals.

The committee asked Caputo, for instance, to produce documents related to a June 2016 meeting at Trump Tower between Donald Trump Jr. and a Russian lawyer. Caputo did not attend the meeting and, according to his attorney, has no documents about it.

It also asked him to produce records related to any Russian government contact with a long list of other Trump aides and associates. His attorney again indicated he had no responsive documents to the request.

The committee, however, did not ask Caputo about his communications with Trump adviser Roger Stone, with whom he is close. Nor was he asked about his contacts with a Russian national who contacted him in May 2016 to offer information about Hillary Clinton in exchange for money. Stone met with the man at a Miami-area restaurant, but discussions ended after he asked for $2 million for his information. Caputo and Stone have alleged that the man was working for the FBI.

Something is very wrong with Trump [Duh!] (CNN)Let's pause for a moment and consider that President Donald Trump's chief of staff Mick Mulvaney had to say on national TV that his boss is "not a white supremacist" and one of Trump's senior advisers, Kellyanne Conway, had to push back against her own husband's questioning of Trump's mental state. Over the weekend, as Trump ranted on Twitter, George Conway, who is a prominent conservative lawyer, posted the psychiatric definition of narcissistic personality disorder and asked all Americans to think about Trump's "mental condition and psychological state." Acting chief of staff: Trump is not a white supremacist Naturally, the press wanted to hear Kellyanne Conway's view. "No, I don't share those concerns," she said as she went to work at the White House on Monday. She added that she had been busy with her children and may not have been aware of all the President's recent tweets.

YALE PSYCHIATRIST: TRUMP'S "LACK OF CONSCIENCE" MAKES THE PRESIDENT "CAPABLE OF CRIMINAL ACTIVITY"

"Because he never addresses the source of his inner emptiness, it remains ever unfilled," Dr. Bandy X. Lee argues

Tana Geneva March 12, 2019 7:40PM (UTC)

This article originally appeared on Raw Story

The Republican apparatus is lining up behind Donald Trump's re-election campaign, despite the President's many legal troubles, from the Russia investigation to pay-offs to Stormy Daniels. His former campaign manager Paul Manafort and his former fixer Michael Cohen are both serving prison terms for crimes they committed while being closely associated with the Trump businesses and campaign.

Nevertheless, Trump seem eager to persevere over his Democratic challengers and is setting a harsh tone for the upcoming campaign: on Monday, he accused the party of harboring anti-Jewish sentiment.

Raw Story spoke with Dr. Bandy X. Lee, a forensic psychiatrist at Yale School of Medicine, about the current political moment, the President's mental state, and an upcoming conference by the World Mental Health Coalition, an organization of mental health experts who are seeking to eliminate the problem of dangerous disorders in leadership by offering fitness-for-duty exams.

She edited the New York Times bestseller, "The Dangerous Case of Donald Trump: 27 Psychiatrists and Mental Health Experts Assess a President," to be released in an expanded edition next week. She is the newly-appointed president of the World Mental Health Coalition, formerly the National Coalition of Concerned Mental Health Experts, which has joined with international partners to form the new organization.

Lee is organizing an interdisciplinary conference next week in Washington, DC, on the same day as the release of her new book (for more information, go to: dangerouscase.org).

Raw Story: Can you describe some of the psychological patterns you find alarming?

Certain things I cannot know without an examination, but there is a lot I can know, and with all the high-quality data that are available, I now know as much about his patterns as any patient I have ever examined. Just about every hypothesis I would have tested in an office setting has been demonstrated in real life, in real time with real consequences, and it would be dishonest for me to pretend this were not the case.

We had long been warning that psychological dangerousness in the office of the presidency would soon translate into social, cultural, and geopolitical dangerousness, and that is happening now. We have to join forces to figure out what we can do, since no one field can contain it now —not even politics can handle it, apparently. The Finnish reporter who contacted me said: “One person being deranged is understandable. We see this from time to time. What is frightening are the millions and tens of millions of people who believe this is just wonderful.” Outside observations are helpful when we start to lose our own ground.

Attendees can register online through dangerouscase.org.

The title of the conference is, “The Dangerous State of the World and the Need for Fit Leadership.” Exactly a week from today, in Washington, we will be holding a major interdisciplinary conference with the nation’s top experts from multiple fields: mental health, law, history, political science, economics, social psychology, philosophy, nuclear science, and climate science. These experts will be coming together for the first time at this urgent time, to share their knowledge with one another and with the public. This is because clear analysis of a situation is the first step toward finding an informed and effective solution.

The technology and the extensive war-making powers that are available to our president, in his unstable state, make this perhaps one of the most dangerous moments in the history of our nation and the world. Just when a correct appraisal is most urgent, expert voices are all but lacking in public discourse.

The group organizing the conference is the World Mental Health Coalition, an organization of mental health experts who are seeking to eliminate the problem of dangerous disorders in leadership by offering fitness-for-duty exams for all presidential and vice-presidential candidates. We are also recommending that all nations where the leader controls weapons of mass destruction do the same.

JEFF SESSIONS SAYS THE PRESIDENT SHOULD "FORFEIT HIS OFFICE" FOR OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE

By Christopher Powell

Published on March 6, 2019

The legal team of popular vote loser Donald Trump is gearing up for a fight they're ill-equipped for, as they're already making the argument that the President cannot be guilty of Obstruction of Justice. Well, that's ignorant. Of course he can.

And you know who else thinks he can? Jeffrey Beauregard Sessions, who argued as such as a Senator trying to bring down then President Bill Clinton in the late 1990s.

Read those words over and over and over again, because we need to make sure Sessions hasn't forgotten them – "no one is above the law."

Politico Reports, In 1999, Sessions – then an Alabama senator – laid out an impassioned case for President Bill Clinton to be removed from office based on the argument that Clinton obstructed justice amid the investigation into his affair with White House intern Monica Lewinsky.

“The facts are disturbing and compelling on the President’s intent to obstruct justice,” Sessions said, according to remarks in the congressional record.

“The chief law officer of the land, whose oath of office calls on him to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution, crossed the line and failed to defend the law, and, in fact, attacked the law and the rights of a fellow citizen,” Sessions said during Clinton’s trial in the Senate, two months after he was impeached by the House. “Under our Constitution, equal justice requires that he forfeit his office.”

Sessions isn’t alone. More than 40 current GOP members of Congress voted for the impeachment or removal of Clinton from office for obstruction of justice. They include Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell – who mounted his own passionate appeal to remove Clinton from office for obstruction of justice – Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley and Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr, who was a House member at the time.

It will be fun watching Sessions, McConnell, Grassley, Burr, et al do the mental/logical gymnastics they’ll inevitably do to show us why Clinton could obstruct justice, but Trump can’t.

Politics The Independent Trump news live - President launches late-night Twitter storm as poll shows most Americans think he is a criminal Donald Trump has lashed out at a number of old enemies on Twitter overnight, including Hillary Clinton, as his frustration with House Democrats and the investigations surrounding him threatens to boil over. The president accused the Democrats of “playing games” by instigating “McCarthyite” congressional investigations against him rather than getting on with the business of government, refusing to hand over files related to his son-in-law Jared Kushner’s security clearance to the House Oversight Committee and indicating he might not co-operate with the House Judiciary Committee’s abuse of power investigation into his inner circle.

A former campaign aide for President Trump, one of 81 people to receive a request for documents this week from the House Judiciary Committee, has already informed the committee that he has no records responsive to their inquiries and he does not plan to testify in front of the panel.

The letter from an attorney for Michael Caputo, who worked for Trump during part of the 2016 campaign, represents the first skirmish in what is likely to be broad resistance from Trump aides and associates to new inquiries issued this week by the Judiciary Committee.

Caputo told The Washington Post that he has already begun coordinating with four other Trump associates who received requests from the committee this week to begin a joint strategy of resisting requests for testimony.

“All four are reluctant to appear because they believe it’s a perjury trap [riiiiight well, if you tell the truth, no trap] designed to move toward impeachment of the president,” he said.

Many of those who received the requests this week have already been interviewed by the House and Senate intelligence committees, as well as special counsel Robert S. Mueller III. But the Judiciary Committee, which has the power to impeach the president, has launched its own wide-ranging probe of Trump campaign aides, business associates and family members as part of what Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) said was a way to explore whether the Trump administration has abused its power. Nadler took control of the committee in January with the new Democratic majority in the House.

© Chip Somodevilla/Getty Images Former Trump campaign aide Michael Caputo arrives to testify before the House Intelligence Committee in July 2017.

Caputo attorney Dennis C. Vacco indicated in the letter that a committee staffer asked whether he would be willing to testify in front of the committee, a request that has not yet been made publicly of Caputo or other potential witnesses.

Vacco wrote that he told the committee lawyer that Caputo would not commit to appear, given that he already testified in front of other congressional committees.

“We see no reason why the House Judiciary Committee cannot obtain the transcript of Mr. Caputo’s testimony” from the House Intelligence Committee, Vacco wrote.

A spokesman for the committee declined to comment on Caputo’s letter. A person familiar with the exchange said there was no formal request for Caputo’s testimony but only a casual conversation between Caputo’s lawyer and committee attorney Barry Berke.

The Judiciary Committee blitzed dozens of Trump associates with broad requests this week, rather than issuing targeted questions at individuals.

The committee asked Caputo, for instance, to produce documents related to a June 2016 meeting at Trump Tower between Donald Trump Jr. and a Russian lawyer. Caputo did not attend the meeting and, according to his attorney, has no documents about it.

It also asked him to produce records related to any Russian government contact with a long list of other Trump aides and associates. His attorney again indicated he had no responsive documents to the request.

The committee, however, did not ask Caputo about his communications with Trump adviser Roger Stone, with whom he is close. Nor was he asked about his contacts with a Russian national who contacted him in May 2016 to offer information about Hillary Clinton in exchange for money. Stone met with the man at a Miami-area restaurant, but discussions ended after he asked for $2 million for his information. Caputo and Stone have alleged that the man was working for the FBI.

YALE PSYCHIATRIST: TRUMP'S "LACK OF CONSCIENCE" MAKES THE PRESIDENT "CAPABLE OF CRIMINAL ACTIVITY"

"Because he never addresses the source of his inner emptiness, it remains ever unfilled," Dr. Bandy X. Lee argues

Tana Geneva March 12, 2019 7:40PM (UTC)

This article originally appeared on Raw Story

The Republican apparatus is lining up behind Donald Trump's re-election campaign, despite the President's many legal troubles, from the Russia investigation to pay-offs to Stormy Daniels. His former campaign manager Paul Manafort and his former fixer Michael Cohen are both serving prison terms for crimes they committed while being closely associated with the Trump businesses and campaign.

Nevertheless, Trump seem eager to persevere over his Democratic challengers and is setting a harsh tone for the upcoming campaign: on Monday, he accused the party of harboring anti-Jewish sentiment.

Raw Story spoke with Dr. Bandy X. Lee, a forensic psychiatrist at Yale School of Medicine, about the current political moment, the President's mental state, and an upcoming conference by the World Mental Health Coalition, an organization of mental health experts who are seeking to eliminate the problem of dangerous disorders in leadership by offering fitness-for-duty exams.

She edited the New York Times bestseller, “The Dangerous Case of Donald Trump: 27 Psychiatrists and Mental Health Experts Assess a President,” to be released in an expanded edition next week. She is the newly-appointed president of the World Mental Health Coalition, formerly the National Coalition of Concerned Mental Health Experts, which has joined with international partners to form the new organization.

Lee is organizing an interdisciplinary conference next week in Washington, DC, on the same day as the release of her new book (for more information, go to: dangerouscase.org).

Raw Story: Can you describe some of the psychological patterns you find alarming?

Certain things I cannot know without an examination, but there is a lot I can know, and with all the high-quality data that are available, I now know as much about his patterns as any patient I have ever examined. Just about every hypothesis I would have tested in an office setting has been demonstrated in real life, in real time with real consequences, and it would be dishonest for me to pretend this were not the case.

We had long been warning that psychological dangerousness in the office of the presidency would soon translate into social, cultural, and geopolitical dangerousness, and that is happening now. We have to join forces to figure out what we can do, since no one field can contain it now—not even politics can handle it, apparently. The Finnish reporter who contacted me said: “One person being deranged is understandable. We see this from time to time. What is frightening are the millions and tens of millions of people who believe this is just wonderful.” Outside observations are helpful when we start to lose our own ground.

Attendees can register online through dangerouscase.org.

The title of the conference is, “The Dangerous State of the World and the Need for Fit Leadership.” Exactly a week from today, in Washington, we will be holding a major interdisciplinary conference with the nation’s top experts from multiple fields: mental health, law, history, political science, economics, social psychology, philosophy, nuclear science, and climate science. These experts will be coming together for the first time at this urgent time, to share their knowledge with one another and with the public. This is because clear analysis of a situation is the first step toward finding an informed and effective solution.

The technology and the extensive war-making powers that are available to our president, in his unstable state, make this perhaps one of the most dangerous moments in the history of our nation and the world. Just when a correct appraisal is most urgent, expert voices are all but lacking in public discourse.

The group organizing the conference is the World Mental Health Coalition, an organization of mental health experts who are seeking to eliminate the problem of dangerous disorders in leadership by offering fitness-for-duty exams for all presidential and vice-presidential candidates. We are also recommending that all nations where the leader controls weapons of mass destruction do the same.

A former campaign aide for President Trump, one of 81 people to receive a request for documents this week from the House Judiciary Committee, has already informed the committee that he has no records responsive to their inquiries and he does not plan to testify in front of the panel.

The letter from an attorney for Michael Caputo, who worked for Trump during part of the 2016 campaign, represents the first skirmish in what is likely to be broad resistance from Trump aides and associates to new inquiries issued this week by the Judiciary Committee.

Caputo told The Washington Post that he has already begun coordinating with four other Trump associates who received requests from the committee this week to begin a joint strategy of resisting requests for testimony.

“All four are reluctant to appear because they believe it’s a perjury trap [riiiiight well, if you tell the truth, no trap] designed to move toward impeachment of the president,” he said.

Many of those who received the requests this week have already been interviewed by the House and Senate intelligence committees, as well as special counsel Robert S. Mueller III. But the Judiciary Committee, which has the power to impeach the president, has launched its own wide- ranging probe of Trump campaign aides, business associates and family members as part of what Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) said was a way to explore whether the Trump administration has abused its power. Nadler took control of the committee in January with the new Democratic majority in the House.

© Chip Somodevilla/Getty Images Former Trump campaign aide Michael Caputo arrives to testify before the House Intelligence Committee in July 2017.

Caputo attorney Dennis C. Vacco indicated in the letter that a committee staffer asked whether he would be willing to testify in front of the committee, a request that has not yet been made publicly of Caputo or other potential witnesses.

Vacco wrote that he told the committee lawyer that Caputo would not commit to appear, given that he already testified in front of other congressional committees.

“We see no reason why the House Judiciary Committee cannot obtain the transcript of Mr. Caputo’s testimony” from the House Intelligence Committee, Vacco wrote.

A spokesman for the committee declined to comment on Caputo’s letter. A person familiar with the exchange said there was no formal request for Caputo’s testimony but only a casual conversation between Caputo’s lawyer and committee attorney Barry Berke.

The Judiciary Committee blitzed dozens of Trump associates with broad requests this week, rather than issuing targeted questions at individuals.

The committee asked Caputo, for instance, to produce documents related to a June 2016 meeting at Trump Tower between Donald Trump Jr. and a Russian lawyer. Caputo did not attend the meeting and, according to his attorney, has no documents about it.

It also asked him to produce records related to any Russian government contact with a long list of other Trump aides and associates. His attorney again indicated he had no responsive documents to the request.

The committee, however, did not ask Caputo about his communications with Trump adviser Roger Stone, with whom he is close. Nor was he asked about his contacts with a Russian national who contacted him in May 2016 to offer information about Hillary Clinton in exchange for money. Stone met with the man at a Miami-area restaurant, but discussions ended after he asked for $2 million for his information. Caputo and Stone have alleged that the man was working for the FBI.
