The General Precepts of the Religion

Anti Voidalism

Book One: Aeon

I have spent my recent days wondering what matters in life the most. And I quickly came to the conclusion that emptiness was the worst of things in life apart from uncontrollable suffering. Filling life with good things, that's what matters. Doing well to bring in good things. Either replacing or supplementing bad things with good or not being empty and nihilistic.

That is the formula of Anti Voidalism, to fill the void with good things. The Evil of life not some Devil, but "Emptiness."

Here is the synopsis of Anti Voidalism:

A new religion about making life one interesting, adventuresome, and having a meaningful purpose – of having a life against the Devil of this belief known as "The Void," and the only way to have a full and eternal soul is by filling the void in the soul.

They try to dispose of it, but it always returns, as always it should be, something held, something brought back, returns for a reason.

Travel with The World what it is, where it can be found, and Goddess Aeon will accompany you.

Everything will all make sense soon enough.

Idea Ways to Fill the Void:

1. By having a good bed, cover and pillow. Or at least a good cover. Then the first task in this religion is to purchase the best, most comfortable blanket you can find. Don't buy silk and cotton is idea. Wool, if you like. A good cover and lush pillow makes life simply better as you lay down each night very comfortably.
2. By having a good chair. One comfortable. This is where you can simply pass the time as many elderly people do, or the leisurely. You could just "be on break" waiting for any interesting thing to happen. Or you could just kind of turn the knob of your life down a little to feel paused a moment. But these just don't work with small wooden chairs.
3. By having good clothes. Those in new clothes, ones carefully selective and good looking, clean and new, feel like a million bucks walking down every street. Not much increases pride as well as good clothing.
4. By having good food and drinks. It might be the best three things in life are food, drinks, and music. I have a cup of iced tea beside me at all times during the day, about five literally of it daily. Many people will just consume food without really tasting and appreciating it. And that happens to the best of us. Including me. But at least some of the time I take it all in more slowly, carefully chewing and enjoying it. A lot of people get over weight just because of compulsive eating. If you spend twenty minutes eating one chicken sandwich then you just aren't so prone to obesity.
5. By having good music. Whatever it is you like. If you are an open minded person then you could sit the day long or just an hour or so listening to the radio. Otherwise you could load up an MP3 player.

6. By having good entertainment. Whatever you like. Whatever it is: be it books, video games, movies, music, cabal TV, quick internet.
7. By collecting something. This is a sure way to be happy. And it may not seem so important than the others, but collections bring about the most material satisfaction whether you are poor or rich.
8. By having a good worthwhile purpose. This doesn't have to be for money but should be for something, such as popularity. This will make your days better. It will let you flow with time instead of against it. You will have something to do and possibly get far doing it. And pride, not coming out of thin air, could come upon you.
Some purposes include programing games, writing books, painting, working on electronics and computers, mods of gaming consoles, wood work, making jewelry, music composition, and carpentry.
9. Having a project. This is a creative work given special attention. Like laying a perfect wall one hefty brick at a time until complete, invest much time and thought into creating something worthwhile and great. These include things from the productivity list above and many other things. It could be putting together a perfect computer (at least perfect to you if not necessarily to others) by working on crafts, like creating a stain glass window, painting the best painting, writing the best song, writing the best book.
10. Perfectionism. While it is often said that nothing is perfect that is just a way of saying "why bother?" Trying to do something perfectly is the whole point in doing your best. When your heart and mind are both fully involved then you will very happy and proud of what you create.
11. Proudly giving gifts. You may want to save your money instead of tending to some one's birthday. I've gotten into that habit, lately. But especially with children your gifts could mean the whole great world to them and maybe that fact is enough to know they are going to enjoy it more than you ever could. Honestly: if you remember the joy you had of the simplest toys, make happy makes happy.
12. Caring for a pet. A pet can be a person's best friend and you, theirs.

13. Going on vacation. It doesn't have to be an adventure to the Bahamas. But any place even somewhat close by, such as a good night at a hotel beside a bar or even to a restaurant, a good one, out of town. There was a hotel I used to go to only three hours out of town, doing nothing more than staying at a hotel. But it was so clean and had the best bed, the best covers, the best privacy while I would just lay down flicking through the channels.
14. A relationship. That's for some, not for others. My idea girlfriend would counsel me, be a kind of support, a Wiccan, who adorably carries a crystal rock in her pocket and prays to a candle, a sweet woman and one sexy, bordering on being a bimbo. That's my tastes, and some like oysters, and if they like oysters, I can like what I like.
15. Making a best friend. My best friend would be a man my age, a bearded type person who was smart with computers, video game console mods, and had a large collection of very old computer things. And someone really into Dungeons and Dragons. One on one friendships are the best.

This religion is about making life better by filling it with good things. It is a simple principle but the most important thing you can do in life is to be aware where things are lacking in it and having a basic knowledge of the right things to draw in.

You might notice sometimes a tune playing in your head. People are a sponge. They can get upon themselves all sorts of messes. But the soap is nearby. We just don't like cleaning. So I am here that you clean and rinse yourself making your soul and life pure and better.

The therapists, called Cleaners in this religion will hear from you what bad you have within: anything bad about life. Anything that is just lacking. Tell them your interests, present yourself to the Cleaner and s/he shall guide you into obtaining a better life.

Talking one on one with them tell them the things you lack, what you wish would happen, the desires in your heart, conditions you wish were not, and s/he shall be well trained on telling you what to find and look for, s)he shall fill your soul with good things if you adhere to him or her.

A person can tell themselves often that they don't need anything. But needing requires desire so what they are essentially saying is that they do not desire anything. But those that desire greatly will have things great, and those that are a content stump will turn away every good thing to rest in place.

Perfection in doing and involvement in receiving

To draw in. To take in. To bring in.

You have to pull it toward you.

To draw out. To push out. To bring out.

You have to release it.

But many a King having it all, knew not what was good at what time.

And lost all time never having become fully involved with any one thing.

Then it is the poorest had the greatest heart and desire

But once he had it, no matter. Because he was just wanting all along.

But at least his heart had joy from time to time.

He embraced the lover he could never before had

Then found once he had her she was of no more interest to him

And he walked away looking for something else.

The key to having what you want is desire to begin with.

The key to love what you have made came from perfection.

But many a person chooses toil to be doing. Else they'd get no sense that their work is hard, worth anything.

The most successful people did things others would or could not, or more often unable to. But the person that goes the extra mile finds the following Mike's to be quite easier, and that is the most proud of anyone walking anywhere. So he set it in his heart to make a perfect Goddess. A Goddess Mother named Aeon, for whom he's give all his praise for his works.

-Charges Filed Against God-

AKA Yaweh:

I hereby charge God with the crime of child abuse whom, though He confessed was my true Father, He treated me negligently and would not save me while I was drowning. He also has committed atrocious crimes against His Son Jesus, whom he tortured and made deranged.

I charge God with abuse and negligence. He pushed me out of the home He gave me and hatefully sent me out into the world homeless. He never let me prepare for the world. I was forced and threatened to read the Bible long hours by both his other sons and daughters as well as straight from the horses mouth. He said if I didn't love Him He was going to set me afire, forever. So I charge Him with Criminal Threats and request a restraining order against Him.

I was badly starving and drinking Luke warm water throughout the day when my brother Jesus came to me and went off elaborating His crazy way about if I thirst He will lead me to cool waters and other such nonsense. Then God came up to me and gave me a bag of rice. He was quite proud of Himself thinking this would keep me from starving. He said "Here you go, son!" And Jesus said to him "I was trying to tell him. God, what a good God you are!"

But off I roamed eating from the garbage and thirsty as all Hell. It seemed that God could not wait for me to suffer, so I took a dark cup of urine and drank it proclaiming "for I was thirsty and you gave me piss!"

And homeless I remained for a year, and a year incarcerated. And a year in psychiatric confinement. This God is worthless, undependable, un reliable.. useless, negligently, and a dead beat Father who cares nothing for his own.

I hold Him guilty and I consecrate a new God, a Goddess actually named Aeon.

Prayer to Goddess Aeon

Great Mother Aeon

As I lay in this bed tend to me

Notice my suffering and heal me

Watch me grow. Have me grow good and well

Remove from my life obstacles, enemies

Speak softly to me in my younger years until I can hear you fully, and understand your every word.

And then guide me, have me reach far

Put into my life all good things

And remove all things bad

Be as an opponent to my enemies

Graduate me unto godhood, a time where no suffering is, among the more godly races

Fill my heart with both joy and desire

Having me wanting and bring

Bring to me all good things all the days of my life and watch over me always

Hales-Nema

Our Goddess be with you. Our Goddess be realized.

She is our Mother who watches over us. She wraps us all in her wings equally. Though some may have a bad road it is for a greater purpose. That those last at anything will have exercise the arm of life stronger, and come ahead in the future, none are permanently the last.

Aeon, our Goddess, we rest underneath Her wings. We drink the drink that makes the blood as blue, we are nurtured by Her. And someday we will be among her flock and meet others like her, even our equals, when the time comes.

Make an idol for her.

What should constitute an Aeonic Church:

There should be cleaners and furnishers there as mentioned before. Actually I'd separate these into two, instead of just "cleaners." The cleaners are to remove negative things in life. The furnitures are to replace it with good things. Every religion has a type of counseling method, whether it be a Bible study or something of Scientology (auditing) ours do too and it is that. Whoever makes such a Church (because as I do while creating new religions I speak of possible futures as a self fulfilling prophesy) its creator should train a handful of people to clean and furnish (removal of junk, replaced by good furnishing.) Have them observe what a member desires to be healed by them and fix them and their heart regarding it. The furniture has it's members fill their lives with better, more enjoyable, and more positive things. The cleaner stops negative things or other wise removes them.

Service by service it's head Priest which they are called Priests whether male or female, informed people about good things to do. This could be an idea for a project but better, a place to play games in town, Bingo, D&D, Pokemon, you name it. Or swimming, or a gym, or what good and entertaining things are around.

The Priest is also to advice on general concepts of making life better. As it's foundation is in this religion, it's members are regarded as vessels that need to have brought in all good things in life and emptying out the bad.

Of course money may be made by this organization. Certainly no one would do so well we're it all free. This can be regular donations and/or fixed donations, as they are called. Remember, my books are all things and free, and in public domain.

Singing doesn't have to be there, nor anything other Churches have necessarily. The advice for that is simple, it either fits or it doesn't.

Prayer and worship if Aaron must be the most important of all.

Aeon make us better, make us whole. Blessed be the name of the Good One. And make great idols for her in the representation of Her Mother hood.

But most importantly and in all sincerity the leaders of the Church should have extensive knowledge about Anti Voidalism.

Hold hands together male with female and form a circle, each shouting and proclaiming that Aeon is great, Aeon is good. That Aeon be with you. That Aeon is never absent. That Aeon may be found, even in this day. For it was Her who saved us. It was Her that busted out the unholy chains of bondage to "Christ" and halted any harmful doctrine we were given. She set us free and cleaned our eyes from what is false. These Christian doctrines are the worst thing that ever occurred to human kind, without a doubt. They deluded and misguided us for centuries, like complete and utter fools. They brainwashed us! But Aeon be our ever – liberator. Go the way toward Aeon and be free. Have Her remove in every way other theologies that have corrupted you and be altogether whole and pure, be purified with the best water. Cool your soul with it, and wash the face free of impurities through Goddess Aeon.

May your New day be bright and better spent. May you be fully able to recognize what bad there is in your life and cut it from you, filling your heart and mind with better things, and have a new soul, one good and full with all excellently. I will take you along that way. I will show you along the road all things that are good. Things choice, without equal. These things I promise you in the name of Goddess Aeon.

Aeon Will Give you a Soul Like None Other

Aeon She looks I'll upon the sight of one captured into same-beingness. She wants us to each and all bear a unique self standing soul. She cuts straight through those who are one and the same collected together, never knowing who they are but they can only be one with others, with a knife most concise, most sharp.

She separates people to move apart from each other. She does not separate them for Her sake, but for theirs. She has sought out the people of people's who are never themselves but one with others. And she traps them and places them elsewhere in different places.

She only wants for you a soul of your own. She is The Giver of Souls, separating you from others and making you a unique being all your own. She inscribes in their hearts I am one. She engraves in their soul only on my own am I my own. And those that do not resist but rather follow suit will be rewarded in the same. But those that resist will come to destroy there selves, for it never was, for it can never be it's own otherwise.

The greatest lesson is left by Her teaching everyone to go their own way and build a strong healthy heart. A heart that desires. It is like a fire She Kindles within us that burns with involvement and interest, favor and desire. She will have us not eating from the mouth of others. But will instead open our mouths wide to consume one's own true food, that food that is most satisfied with what it eats

She gives us a fruit that God wouldn't. She does not place before us forbidden fruit but food that is the true fruit of one's own founded liking. That food exclusive to us as we decide and come to know come to terms if necessary in liking. The true fruit of one's liking. That food we have found when looking for our own eyes, and put all others aside. Reaching out for it with our own hands, and tasting it with our own mouth.

Let the fire burn within you that consumes, for nothing pale is ever appreciated it even acknowledged.

May Aeon Be Moved From Heart to Hand

First write on a piece of paper

What is the best of these, being specific:

What is the best bread? What is the best dairy food? What is the best meat? What is the best desert? What is the best of the best in these? The best flavors? Why some flavors are good in one area but not another? What are the best of all kinds of foods?

What is the best music? What is the best songs of these? Why is one better than the other? How could it be better?

What are the best toys? What is the best cartoon, movie, shows? And why? What do you like best about these?

If you could work creatively on something what would you truly like to make? What have you always wanted to do but never had, or hadn't given enough consideration to? What would you like to make your own version of (book, game, tarot cards, anything)? What would you like to do your own version of hopefully doing better than anyone before you?

If there were six very inexpensive things that you'd truly like to have what would they be? Could that list be made better? What about 8, 10, even 12 inexpensive things you would like to own? What are they?

And expensive things, too. What would you like to have the very best of? The best kind of jewelry you could have, the best necklace, a precious jewel, a specific kind of shirt: think of something special to you. Are there any shirts like that you could find? Or perhaps a cup with it on their, a book, a collectable? Think about the very best things you like. It can be anywhere from Rainbow Bright to the Ninja Turtles. It could be a crystal frog, anything. There is no wrong thing to like. Find out what it is you like, and burn with desire for it. Your soul will be on fire, ever burning with passion.

Leveling up in the Game of Life

May it be a principle that serves you well: always climb upwards in doing better than before. Granted each time doesn't have to be as high as you want, you may go as high as you want, but to sometimes, at least, take a bigger step up than usual. That sometimes you will do exceptionally better, but you will not always do exceptionally better, but that's no matter, the matter is that generally you do well in relation to proportion.

Do one thing than do it better, do something much easier if it pleases you, as long as you know you could have done it better and in due time do so.

It is a most excellent principle to live by, doing the best work that you can. That life presents us with a challenge. Many will sit idle and your competition isn't too overwhelming but certainly there. And in times of low standards you have a great opportunity to do better.

Being better than your self before consistently is a guide that will lead you to lofty places up high. Every enemy you've ever had will be silenced by your successes and filled with jealousy. Even great jealousy!

We are living in "that's good enough" times where a champ is made from shattered pieces collected from the ground, regarded as jewels. Many and more all the time people will be proud of the simplest of accomplishments because his/ her competition just isn't there. There are two, three, beside him doing the same, succeeding without real value, and given overhead banners that fill the sky. But in the future they will be regarded ill, a plague, a disaster, an ailment, a disease that prevented evolution.

What could be such a small yet potent principle than this: do better than you did before, to become better today than you were yesterday. That is "The Diamond Rule."

Feasts and Pride Idols and Collecting

--Or simply coupling food and music with pride. That is the trinity of Anti Voidalism, that fills the soul with happiness and contentment. Regarding it it can be said that no other thing is lacking. Happiness comes from pride, self esteem, and food has always been with celebrating. Celebrate through what you eat and be filled with thoughts of worth, as true as those thoughts are valid – but they are always more valid than you think. Music has always been with those who celebrate, too.

Do something well, and be your own reward. Do what is not normally done. Do something special. Put the pieces together and hope for the best. The best outcome of what you are doing understand and the worst outcome do not be outweighed by.

Be grateful for your own self. Climb the ladder, clean the room, make yourself a new home, do well all of your days, remove the bad, the negative, transform into something better and have your wealth be represented by what you collect.

That is the reason why people collect things they do not usually use, if at all. They want to see what their money represents. That's why I like idols. Idols are representations of my money procured based on what I am doing to honor them and to have them as trophies. To have won them over. And Anti Voidalism is heavy laden with idols and their worship, if not so much worship than prayers and gifts given them.

One can make an idol that is of their selves, with none the wiser. Or just have one of oneself with a person's most honored deities to their left and to their right.

Waiting for the Future

Let us observe this:

That suffering decreases with scientific advancements. Life was so bad not even so far as a century ago that the best of them didn't have these good things that we do. Life was very bad if you go back two hundred years. There was no plumbing. There were filthy and stench ridden out houses. There was no lighting. People we're very cold, often, in going around, if even they could. And now we are driving fast and reliable cars zooming back and forth quickly.

For entertainment people had at best a person with a banjo. Whether or not music was better then than now we have both new and old music. We have all of their music recorded, volumes of it. In fact people then may have had a small and expensive record collection. But we have them as digital files.

People had Odyssey and Atari game consoles. Like a poor person of Pac Man at best. And later came 2D games. Time passes and we have 3D. Now look at we have! And to go along with that we have TVs that are far larger.

We have more treatment for disease. Our lives are longer. Probably largely because our lives are easier. Things are cheaper and more easily come by. A person may have spent his savings on a nineteen inch black and white TV. They may have saved up for an awesome new Atari. A game that is easily gotten free. In short the best things of yesterday are the least of today and things are becoming ever cheaper, yet ever better.

This is what I like to just carry with me in my thoughts. Human suffering will not continue on forever. I can only imagine what we'd have even five years from now. No computer of the nineties can do all my phone can. And my phone was cheaper than the best that decade had to offer.

I can very well sit and wait for man kind's time to come. One of the things I like to watch are newly patented things, good things. Right now we are getting into talking to our computers like they first did on Star Trek The Next Generation. And AI is developing all the time.

And it is AI and robotics that will take our jobs, hopefully so! That only means that we could have slaves again. And not in an evil way. But in a way that they aren't any different no not without an ego. They'd do all of our work. Maybe we can do what we want instead of working for others, impersonally.

And just a few other pieces of science are needed to really end our hardship on Earth, even just about all of it. Things like replicators. Things like a solid energy field protecting any one inside, wherever they go. And even a fountain of youth formula! One that leads us into immortality. But nature shows us it is not easy to do as well as it:

Cheetahs still run faster than our normally driven speed in a car. A volcanic eruption is still more powerful than our greatest bombs, we still have only a little protection against Earth quakes and hurricanes, there are still animals on Earth that live longer than us, or at least trees. It is something that presents before us greatness that can be, to be better than that's not easy!

One Must Be Filled Spiritually, not just Physically!

The world is a rich place, beyond belief. There are many treasures within it. People should take the time to consider this. And as one of the dictates of Anti Voidalism offers unless you create a desire, you'll never want or enjoy anything.

Unless you think about something appreciatively. Unless you think about what involvement could provide – you will have no need, preferring to stay empty. And emptiness is the Devil of Anti Voidalism.

So give thought to what is outside of the house. The house is very well a place where we would all choose to stay, if possible, but we miss out in the process. Along the lines of what I am suggesting you could think of the library, for example. Think about going there to find a good book. Or if you prefer, a better place to shop. People opt for the easier, more familiar trip to a store. But there are many many stores in any given town. It may be more comfortable for you to go to a place nearby. But rather consider what you may be missing out on.

Put more into your life, Anti Voidalism requires it. It is a good request made for you – it will pay back in high dividends. To broaden your world, or else be trapped in a cage relegated to a small piece of it. There are those of small worlds and those of medium worlds and there are even those of larger worlds. The Anti Voidalism should always have the big world.

Look for a favorite restaurant not finding it until you have gone to them all. Go to a grocery store with regular candy and try every kind until you've found a favorite. Then go to a store with special candy, possibly foreign. Buy all of them one or a couple at a time until you've found a favorite.

Go to a toy store, a comic book store, a pawn shop, a flea market, a gaming store, an antique store. To all kinds of stores, Good Will, Salvation Army, idol store or magic supply store. These, until you find your favorite store.

If you like to smoke then buy a pack a day every day of a different brand each time, until you've found the best. And if you like to drink, do the same with alcoholic beverages.

It is truly the spice of life. It is to have variety. It is to expand far and wide. It is to come to appreciate things. It is a perfect way to fill your time. It is highly indicative of Anti Voidalism and something you should teach to others.

I once had a friend that knew the city of San Francisco very well (where I live, and rest his soul.) We would go to jazz concerts, classical music concerts, certain shops and places I hadn't any idea were there, here, in this city. And these things were free! I used to have to go to a building that had computers, that were of good use while I was writing, before I had a good phone, and it got me by. I just think it is a better home to be in a large city unless you are just the sit and knit type.

I prefer to do things like group bingo and electronics, jewelry making and magic the gathering, dungeons and dragons or City college classes, but most of all just shopping in a flea market or Good Will type place, never knowing what I'll find, not wanting it until I see it, making my income kind of magically used.

There are always leisurely games

Games that do not require too much dedication and involvement

What I am referring to are video game board or card games, sports games or gambling games. I actually prefer sports games while I am shuffling through old games at game stores and the flea market. They are always cheapest. Out of all the genres of video games these are referred to as the most worthless. But to me they are about the most valuable. I used to play video games that could not be beaten without much time and effort. And I grew tired of that. I stopped playing games for some time not knowing that was the only case. So it occurred to me why and for the first time I started playing video games I came to call "leisurely." Games that each time played could be beaten within an hour.

Strategy games are also among these, and puzzle games such as Tetris, and also "Sim City,"

These games aren't so taxing. My favorite of these if I only had one was an old (or getting old) Nintendo DS game called Club House Games. The Game Boy Advance had a large amount of board games put into a video game for it, you name it, from mouse trap to Monopoly, Clue, Risk, Connect Four, Yahtzee, Life, Scrabble, to Mouse Trap. Among them too a card game called Skip Bo, which had Uno on the same cart. Skip Bo I adore, it is idea for me.

There are golf, basket ball, football, soccer, tennis, base ball, and these games are the cheapest yet the easiest to play. And I wonder if it will occur to people someday that that's why they are such good games, for the reasons I've said. But you do have a better sports game if the are not old but new particularly with sports games, new is so much better. The mechanics of the game are a little awkward and too simplistic than what was before. The AI a little lame, meaning that you can't really apply skill on the very early sport based games. The newer sports games had better AI and mechanics.

However some things never age other than graphically. That is so with gambling games. In then you go into a building and play black jack or poker, slots or roulette. Something like that can't age much.

And also among leisure games are racing ones and fishing/ hunting. Enough has been said about all this, enjoy.

Who Aeon is

Aeon was once an ancient god who was dying. Very ancient and become of something dully existing, it's existence didn't matter much to it. It had been looking for one last joy, anything. And just before it made its last breath it caught the eye of two humans suffering. The god, suddenly a she, saw these two humans without food. She wandered what food was, not really knowing. She saw the man of this couple of man and woman clump together some mud, putting it into his mouth, this spitting it out. He cried out, "Great Goddess Aeon feed me!" And she raised mighty hand lifting up a great beast, set it on fire with the essence of her soul, and there it lay completely cooked before them.

So he drew out his knife and ate with his wife and proclaimed Aeon is great! Around has fed us!" When after his wife said, "We will serve you all of our days, blessed be the name of Aeon."

Aeon then transformed herself into a motherly Goddess for all human kind. She has been with people suffering as she has wanted to be with. She lives by us, and some of us have had life due to her. She brings to strangers good things. She knows where there is suffering. She is evident in history. She is not difficulty found there in. I present her to you that you can have a Goddess true and dependable, one whom words I speak, one from whom's thoughts flow.

It was Aeon who gave birth to the moon to let us know we are never truly in the dark. It is by her that the tide flows and resends.

At the worst time in my life having been homeless and considerably deranged for that time, Aeon came to me in the night. I had been freezing late at night and she came over me like a blanket. I had been thirsty and starving and She fed me. She said take her warmth and be wrapped in Her love. That as I know suffering more than any one She is going to guide me into a life where I could help many in her name. That not to fall prey to death, she will protect me and lead me into a better life. A Christian had been preaching in the streets not long after, while I was homeless too, saying something about God being good and if love, giving freely of those who asked. So I asked for cool water and a man came up to me and hour or so later and gave me a warm diet Pepsi. I had found that for some reason I had been worshipping the wrong God and it had been costing me.

So I kept Around in my mind and heart, often, being visited by her in the night being kept warm. I actually lost my shoes and went barefoot awhile. And found a brand new pair of Nike shoes around the corner on top of a trash can. That same can also had on top, later, a Harley Davidson rattle snake skin belt. Which was good. My pants were too lose. And I prayed to Aeon, "Aeon, I need food, and Aaron, bring me what I need. Then I was visited often by people who gave me food. And one night I inexplicably awoke with a good thick blanket above me.

I had this Mickey Mouse doll that I pretended was the Devil. I had such an attraction to idols you wouldn't believe. I would go into idol stores and pray to the idols freely then leave. The closest thing I could have to an idol was that doll. But maybe Around was jealous? I lost it that night. More likely She was trying to show me that She was a better choice. I don't take her as jealous. Anyways that night my doll was gone replaced by a an unfamiliar metallic figure.

She has been there for me. She had been there for individuals, until me, and through me, she is given to many.

Have the real truth: the idea of God is absurd. God is cruel and harmless, greedy and jealous, hateful and judgmental. Christians are very much the same. Christians are people that are constantly judging others! But Aeon is a Goddess not like a hateful ever ready to discipline, but rather She is a loving mother.

A Software that would Accompany This Religion Well

Imagine a software that provides an idea for things you can do where ideas are lacking. The idea is that you input things you like to do by rating. According to rating and input based on the outcome the software will indicate what you can do, providing advice through AI.

You would list your favorite things. It would add to those things, intelligently, and sense when it is you've forgotten about them or would like them and at what time. It would provide a similar chain of things that you could do, and how they are done. It would provide tutorials, introductions at least, and allow for insertion of notes to help you. And most importantly allow for varied degrees of difficulty and offer up an easier way something may be done. In knowing the optimal way for the individual to do them.

It would basically be a storehouse of activities and daily challenges.

It would be able to cause you to do things a little at a time instead of a lot at once, and that would be very useful. Someone who does something often doesn't have a good conception of what is better and then just a little better and then a little better than that but this software could do that. It could have you do things a little better at a time unless you are stepping up more quickly than normal, and so to request a bit higher step from where you are.

It would improve you all around. It would expand you. It would make you better at one thing to be better all around at similar things you like.

You could be shown a map on where to go and in deciding where you go to next or what to do next a map would be formed showing you your own ways and offering a glimpse of what kind of person you are, doing what.

Things like budgeting and opportunity would be available in this software and advice to avoid obstacles and short coming.

Choice Food is Good for the Soul

While I was homeless I had a choice. Bread was about everywhere in The Fisherman's Warf of San Francisco, as long as edible food that was entirely inedible by me. I could have taken and eaten food I didn't like and as well gotten used to it, though never satisfied by it entirely. But I took a different option, to start digging in the trash for food that though was slightly old never getting things set there for very long, but eyeing for deposits of sweets most of all, if I was lucky I got a soda with ice left in it. And I simply chose to only eat what was tasted good, choosing starvation over blandness.

Aeon opened a door for me. And it was due to my position, my choice. My days were much better because of it. I had asked Aeon for a type of freshly baked corn chip, and not long after, a few days perhaps, there was a brand new bag of them on top of the trash can (not inside it.) I kinda doubted it was because of my prayer. But those chips were only available on the other side of town! And I had left that area I was in. And still a place far from that restaurant I like serving freshly baked corn chips. I tell you, Aeon was so helpful that I always had good food after I began “worshipping” Her. Which is not worship. She will have appreciation and acknowledgment, not worship. Anyways a lady gave me a brand new bag of those chips I loved. I think it may have been two new bags, even. I don’t really remember.

It was just so noticeable. The help I received, I may as well have not been homeless. There was a very tasty orange drink, kind of slushy with real fruit. And I promised to Aeon I would never forget her. That I would dedicate myself to Her and remember her, presenting Her to new people, for all of her goodness.

The right way to follow her, to do as She’s want, is to only fill yourself with good things, never accepting things that aren’t, things of lesser value. And it is a wise way She would impart on you. Those that will have only the best will both receive and get what is the best. Those that accept a despot life will survive on desperation. I tell you it is true that one night I prayed for a Mickey Mouse shirt (why? Well because desire is a whole different matter when you are homeless) and the next night I was walking up to a sense were I slept each night beside a side walk, and upon the fence? A new Mickey Mouse shirt!

If I had followed God I would have remained had gotten no where. This God as he calls himself “the mighty one who will not be shared with other gods,” is not worth singularity. It is the other gods that will be more one on one with you, and very friendly. God does not care for you—that God named Yahweh? It says in “his” book that he loves you. But isn’t the proof in the pudding? To say that God personally cares for you is the most glaring contradiction in the Holy Bible. He hates people. He throws them out like garbage. The Bible is riddled with his hatefulness, usually over the most petty of things. He will rage and plot for a century over those that make idols, but then give his follower a few hundred wives yet tell you to never commit adultery.

Even if you had favor with him it does no good. What favor can be of him, anyway? Has he ever rewarded someone with a life that is good and worthwhile. Does he not despise the “wise” and the “proud?” Does he have ever really more value for a person than being a martyr? Hell he sends to, I think is a more dignified place than Heaven where “for eternity he chosen gives him praise.”

Aeon, blessed be the day that I found her. I was crippled with suffering and nearly without clothes. When I was without shoes, she brought me some. When I chose to have the best food, the best was given me. What Aeon gives you is always good and wholesome. But God is a God that will give you salt less beans and be most proud of himself. He is not the only God. There are many besides him, and they are all better a Good to worship, it really seems, and you are better off without him for no good can come of him whether you worship him or don't.

To serve Her best, choose the best things to have in your life and reject the lesser things at any possible cost. For She is a Goddess that will serve those who will take things that are good and deny or remove those things that aren't. The best way to serve Her? Whatever you take in have it be optimal.

Let us be a People who both search for and find the best. A People of high standard. A People who go only the best places. A People who can share that goodness with others. And a People who will have beside them Excellency and so incur all of Aeon's good graces. May it forever be so in the blessed named of Aeon, Hales-Nema, Amen.

Having an Independently Operating Soul

As easily we are influenced and formed by people instead of ourselves singularly, we are not so much ourselves as we are others. For many people what they like they like. Worst of all are those bonded together from same tastes and causes. I suggest it is better to me yourself because only then are you a self and not a selves.

Most people will have a very shallow consideration toward any given thing. Those that do give much consideration, having multiple perspectives toward any given thing, count cards, see the better, Fuller picture. Some will actually look at a painting but just stare at its corner, in a way of speaking.

If anger has taught me anything it is to have multiple perspectives. I mean, yeah, everyone has a bad day, someone has suffered a lot in life and is returning it back, words are just words, I could have people in my life who are far worse asshole, even asshole Kings and Queens, this is going to happen in life, it will never change, maybe I did something to piss them off, some off hand comment, sometimes, this time, that time, why and when... that sounds like a lot to think through but sense argues with me that I myself have no good reason to remain angry and ruin my day.

If you practice a more broad and far reaching understanding, perspective, ideas about and such toward any given thing then it will keep you thinking more independently. You will not be what I call "tunnel minded." The tunnel minded only see things one way and haven't but one place to go with what they are thinking. But for those thinking more broad have minds like those that light up the world around them.

That's just done by thinking things through. It really is that simple—just think things through.

Enhancement, Creation, and Restoration is Aeonic

Aeonic means something eternal, something lasting forever. Therefore, these things are Aeonic, they preserve things, extend their life, and continue them on in an effort to keep them around indefinitely.

They that do these work with the hands of Goddess Aeon who is named as "The One Who Will Last Forever."

It is better to enhance and repair things than to throw it out as garbage, to have it sitting there uselessly. Enhancement can be to modernize something. There are numerous examples here, from making a gaming console playable on a new TV perhaps, re binding a book, preserving something, like they recently began doing for LCD electronic games (which isn't easy as such video game things go.) For me my favorite things among this topic are video games and consoles. Apparently it is so also for a large amount of others. There are more and more people doing things like putting new batteries in old battery- saving games. People are putting in new optical drives for disk based consoles. And using new parts freshly manufactured, made because there is a good market for it. Putting in new caps, new screens for game boy or other handheld devices. Putting in them new back lit screens, even indiglo ones. And sometimes they are making reproduction carts. You can get a new "Nintendo 64" controller brand new, even though the system and such halted over a decade ago.

For me that is one of my favorite things to hear about and know about.

It is Aeonic to repair and improve old things and Aeonic is a key word in Anti Voidalism. That includes words such as "enhancement, preservation, recreation, repairing, mending, and overhauling." The void be minimal, be it known the Earth provides great treasure for those who choose to be left behind.

This is an easy thing for anyone. For me it is about games, for some it is about better furniture, but whatever it is for you, doing so gives you the hands of Aeon. May your hands be the hands of Aeon. Amen.

To be a feather when you are a rock

A rock is something that cannot be moved

A feather is a thing that can only be moved

A tree is a thing that grows well

A weed, not so

A beech has course sand, falls right through the hands

Many people fall them whole selves into what is quick sand

But worse than that is tar, which the greatest monsters have fallen into

A star in the sky is good to look at, yet there are many others

The sun was once so mysterious. No matter where you were, there it was

That thing in the sky

The moon glows, 'must have something to do with the sun'

The water either pushes forward, but can run rapidly, and sometimes just sits

The clouds show us things we never see

And the race has grown old and tired of all the world around it. These are no longer cave man days. Man has said "let there be light," and so it was. He has brought together a thing or two unimaginable by those of the past. And he takes these things for granted. S/he is drifting away, far far away from a normal reality unto godhood, but let us look at what was before and be most happy that these things are becoming so. Let us proceed to act as God. We are not yet a God. We are barely just yet becoming gods (lower case letters) Someday, perhaps, we will have enough sense to worship ourselves. As we will becoming God.

The stars in the sky are the best thing in the sky above to see. But the sun will blind you.

To be like dust is to have had no impact during your life

To be like ink is to blot others out

To be like air is to be needed, but not noticed. It is to not be given credit.

It is to be used dry. It is like a gift once given, but later expected and no more acknowledged as given.

To be as a window is to be seen straight through.

To be like a door is to be very inviting and without secrets. It is to be open, or openable. But to be like a lock is for those that are afraid of others, for whatever reason.

To be like carpet is to cover up mistakes and flaw, as is being like make up. To be like make up is more toward covering up inadequacy.

To be like shoes is to know where you are going and how to get there, if only you move. But you do know how

And you could get there until you arrive at your destination. But where will you arrive? What will be there at the end of the road. If you do succeed in popularity or fame, even notoriety and wealth, as you want, if you succeed you are likely succeed more than you predicted. That only makes sense. Believe me I tell you, that at the end of that road is a plane to soar high, or a house of your dreams. Before you succeeded you knew you would have good things, but you did not know just how good good things are. But once in your mouth the taste of it's juices will be as a drink of life, with a very tree growing on it fruit of choice, which, if tended to, will never grow old and die.

Some people's lives are like a watch, precise, predictable.

Some people's life are like a blanket, comfortable, easy.

Some people's lives are like a car, they get places even though sometimes they break down and have to either get a new car or fix something within it.

Some people's lives are like a plane, they only live for their drug inducing highs.

Having a collection of the things you like

It has been said and very often by the "wise" that material possessions will not make you happy. Hell, I am very happy having my large screen phone surfing through you tube. My mind ain't as blank as it'd be while at the park on a bench. The best things in life are free? As what? That material wealth doesn't make you happy they are referring to people who buy something and use it in no way at all. But I don't have to hold something in my hand to enjoy it. I only need to tuck it away under a lock and think about it. It very well makes me feel good just to give these things a thought.

I have a pumpkin Halloween bucket in my room, a large set of colored pens and other things that make me happy when I think about them.

The person who first said that material wealth cannot make you happy didn't realize there were children highly ecstatic Christmas morning. Didn't this guy who said this have a child hood? I mean what kind of terribly deprived childhood did he have? Was he catatonic? Did getting things make a total indifference to him. My God when I was a child I played my Nintendo until the sun went down (and came back up) enjoying every moment, fully involved. Then I wasn't only happy with what I owned, but involved, mesmerized, enthralled.

Who've said that material wealth cannot make you happy must have lived so long ago that all he had was dolls and those other kinds of cheap worthless toys from ages ago. He must not have had a DVD player and movies. What if someone was really involved in a movie and ask "how is that making you happy? That's not possible. It doesn't make any sense!" This person didn't know just how much that I enjoyed my VHS copy of The 1990 TMNT movie.

People have their own kinds of collections. Collecting things is good in any case. It is satisfying to know that you have, that's all there is to it. That's all there has to be to it. To have a whole collection of something I think is better than a hand full of gems. My collection is a collection of things that I like, not a certain specific kind of things, but a handful of different things. So essentially I have a few things I collect, not limiting myself. It is just a joy to find that one best thing in the lot. Part of the joy of collecting is to look for what to add to it.

Fill the Place you are in with Good Things

We act through Aeon in this, that wherever we be, we make better. And that is an Anti Voidalism axiom That wherever we be, we make better. Is an axiom of our religion, a kind of rule.

If you are renting a home improvement it. Put in new shelves, a new faucet, or such things. If it is your home, then make it a good one, a good place to live, after all you live there. And wherever you live you should make better, as you have to be there a lot of the time.

If you are living with friends or family, and they lack anything, then provide it. Even if it is just some new and better cups. If you bring in some paper plates and plastic utensils, then maybe you can skip washing dishes.

If you are young still living at home with your parents then give to your brother or sister good things.

Be the person who supplies mechanical pencils, new batteries, better paper, candies, and new light bulbs. Even new furniture. But ideally don't spend too much unless it is your own place. Because that is just how principles go, you do not want to "buy some or someone's place." But small things are none the same and most welcomed.

The idea behind this involves our Mother Goddess Aeon, who would act through our heart in so doing. It is a formula for us to act through Aeon "through the hands," "Through the mind," "through the air," and "through the heart" that She be present and simply for the important effect of being acknowledged.

Aeon is more real in our lives when we act through her in an honorable way. And in so moving her through you She will be before you. But first She has to move ahead of you.

The Empty

In regards to the Negative Empty and in its most negative state of repetition- are found people that are not filling their minds correctly. The mind is a sponge soaking in what it likes, even after it has been squeezed dry.

Repetition comes upon those that are too proud of what they say. Repetition comes upon those lacking in good new thought. It freezes us and prevents us from moving on. It can be either something too great or too terrible, such as a death in the family.

While we are being situated into reality we go from simple repetitive thinking to thought that is more directed on the present. We then are filling space with more immediately needed wisdom, not memories that run dry, usually negative worrisome ones.

I used to be a hypochondriac. I mean it. I would go over in my mind constantly that something wasn't right. I finally parted ways with such thinking, pretty much all of it as soon as six years ago. I moved on. I have just got to have faith that life will turn up new life, somehow. I don't obsessively ponder the deadly effects of tobacco. I am not worried about catching a serious ailment.

People that are insane will delve deep, deep, deep into thoughts thinking buried under are things of profound wisdom. They are partly right, but such a thinker is also one insane, not knowing good ideas from bad, senseless ones. I know, believe me, I have drowned in involvement with details not knowing really where I was.

Drowning in the details you might not even surface. Be careful. The thoughts that repeat in our minds are thoughts we love, too much. They will keep you awake until you've ceased thinking about them, which is next to impossible if you catch this bug. Better to enjoy a little than thinking you are a lot, but aren't, trying to find what is no longer there.

As for me these days, I think one of the most important things in my life is to just not care. A more moderate pride.

The Math of Good Existence

Below is a list of how numbers can effectively be used for a better, more organized life. Call it "the math of good existence."

1: If you are to make the day good than you must do well at making every hour of the day good. The number one should be the number of focus. To do one thing at a time. Think of one also being the number of doing one better, and that will help you well.

2: Two is the number of combining two things. It is that simple. To know what goes good with something else. Even when there are three ingredients that is really just adding to one thing (one thing to two already combined.) Two is a number of addition, of increase.

3: The number three is the best number to have of what you need in supply. For example: three lighters, three phone chargers, three packs of batteries, three pens. That's because if one runs out, you will have two to depend on, and not be on your last one before you get three again.

4: Four is a good team. It is a good counsel. A good group. At least set aside four hours each day of leisurely time. Four is the number of having set out to do something, a goal, a plan, a new thing established to create. To understand something well enough that it can be created.

5: Five minutes is a good "grace period." If someone is less than five minutes late that should be okay. If someone expects you to wait then more than five minutes is too much. If you are entering a store on the dot, at it's opening wait five minutes before going in.

6: Six is the number of stigma, of things bad. But it can also be a number of inclusiveness, self substantiality, it is to put oneself first in many cases, which is usually neither good or bad, other times bad, other times good. It is the number of pride and having done well in life to have brought about a life better than before. It is the seal of life. It is the seal of two different forces, one of oneself connected to the world.

7: Seven hours a day is a good amount each day to either be working on something or for someone. You have seven days in a week. Seven is the number of a full week. In a week you can accomplish something. You can get things done that need doing. Or you can do something different day by day, one thing for Monday through Sunday, doing at least seven different days. Pay mind then to responsibilities using this number.

8: Drink at least eight cups of fluids a day. Sleep eight hours. Or at least be in bed for eight hours. 8 is the number of a musical octave. 8 is said to be the number of planets in our solar system. Crazy 8s is a popular card name. The 8 ball is the most important one in pool. There is also that toy called the magical 8 ball. And all around it is just a good number to observe.

9: Let's call nine an unconventional number. Being one less than ten, which most people settle on. Then let's call it a "good enough" number. Personally I am a person that intends on doing a ten and shortly before that I purposely settle on a ten, the number of a little less.

10: Ten is the number of an accomplishment of having done your very best. It is to have completed something. Doing it fully, your best. It is a number of fullness in many ways, such as having done what the heart had set out to do to all completeness.

11: the number of Eleven is the number of going the extra mile. It is doing better than before. It is a number of improvement. It is the number of starting where others discontinued. It is new life.

12: The number of twelve is the number of yourself with others. It is the number of Harmony. It is the number of cause, of oneself as enveloped in culture. It is a reaching from one's life into another. It is the number of getting to know others especially through love and interest—but never through hatred and jealousy.

13: Last of all the number 13. The number of thirteen is the number of mystery. It is the number of an irresistible curiosity. It is the number of The Beyond. It is the number of taking a step upward that you didn't know was there. It is the number of ascension, the soul, The Unknown. 13 is the most hidden number and is the greatest treasure.

Love of the World

The world is rich with good things, more than it ever has been in history.

We have deserts and candy, meats and drinks that people further into the past would consider great luxuries, if even they were around. And money makes the world go round, as does capitalism, it's design. There are a flood of new and improved things yearly, even a torrent. And washes to shore years to come in much cheaper prices. The best things that we have, they didn't. And at one time a 4 gig computer with less than a gig of ram was expensive as hell. Now they are practically given away.

Life gets better every day. Sciences are improving. After all, what else would they do? It may be just a bit at a time, but sometimes it is suddenly a lot at a time. Do the math: we are adding regularly. Very little is diminished.

Because everyone that makes the world better makes it better for us all.

Because the worst day today was the best yesterday.

Because things may improve unimaginably, even soon.

Because they are not wasting any time. They are pursuing the best routes as we speak. They are unraveling the mysteries of physics and possible applications to a more optimal science. That is why you should have hope and live well, even if you are just sitting around. There is a lot to be waiting for and a lot to rest your hope on.

But this God named Yahweh has me a bit worried. He is a God that will put the breaks on these things. As powerful as we are becoming he is still much more powerful. And he is a jealous being. He may not like us getting what we do. He might feel we are sanctimoniously trumping him. He may feel that we are out doing him. He may feel unneeded. And he is. He has grown very angry over the years that we are, more and more, ignoring him. And he is a god that will not be ignored. He will throw a fit for attention and destroy all we have worked on. That is the only reason the worry a person can have regarding our advancement. He is a far worse threat than any AI bent to destroy the human race. He has, in fact, been the greatest evil among us.

Life is a Battlefield

Life is delicate. We are all thrown into this world very conditionally. It is like we put here as a day care only temporarily. Sit together and look around. The person right next to you can die, any day, any hour, and so to with the others besides.

Because life had to be in what was a despicable harsh world, life continues, even through the difficulty of life. It is like it is never finished, with more coming daily to this day. And we are brought into the world with many others.

We are given the nature to fight and contend. We are given a selfish heart for the sake of obtaining our piece of the pie. Some of us are brought in life into a place most terrible. Some people are very hateful over time, some not. Some will break at any moment, and a moment later.

It's the sense that we can each and all die at any moment that strikes me as to just how much life is conditional. It has to fight for survival very sensitively. This being the case a person becomes very angry, easily, in protecting her/his boundaries. This guy allows this, this guy doesn't, and we are all together just wishing to live, thrive if at all as possibly we can.

We are raised by our parents until the day we can survive on our own. It is so remarkable how life is conditional. And we cling to life. In our days we've come to fear death in it's widely varied forms. We want to live. And we do. And we don't want it to end, and see that others have died. And we can't know where they went no more than a person that was abducted and never seen again.

So why are we here? Well the start of it shouldn't have been. But now that it is started, it has just got to finish, to work through. There is no God that is just going to wipe us out. The mistake has just got to run its course. We are kind of stuck here like glue against our will, we are made by the first mistake of nature, its faulty designs of "half assed life."

The adjustment period of the soul after death

During your life you accumulate a type of thinking that will last but awhile longer after death. While you are situated into your soul apart from a body you are engulfed in unfathomable confusion, not really knowing where you are, desperately trying to cling onto the fleshly existence that you had. It is similar to what happens while you are dreaming. You are still looking through the eyes of flesh though the thoughts very freely wander. Then the soul kind of just “falls” back into the body. But with death the soul cannot fall back into the body and proceeds to be in a dream like state for awhile trying to understand its new awareness. And like a new born infant this new world is strange and makes little sense.

And I tell you this to prepare you, and remember the things I said this day. You will someday find yourself inside a dream. So anchor yourself with certain thoughts that will indicate to you that this is so. That is done by developing a spiritual mind set that is detached from regular Earthly reality “stretching out” that muscle, removing the blindfold from your spiritual eyes. And most importantly but actually more easily, just know and believe that someday all these things will be so, and carry that thought with you

The world should be filled with better things

Better things to look at, most of all. But drab is the word that perfectly describes our Earthly habitat. Look all around at just how plain things are. I once saw a man who was arrested for painting a really good looking American flag on a trash can. That couldn't describe it any better. We have stone and steel. And very little of anything tastefully painted. But aside from that we could have “good litter” like game pieces tossed around, little figures, and things. The sidewalks could be paved with glitter and have LED lights. The buildings could even glow in the dark. But none of that is found anywhere. That's illegal. It's vandalism and littering. The trash can, it is green. The little lights cost too much. Who in the world would paint their building “glow in the dark?”

Pulling from the void

A self-inclusive (individualist) person does not have popularly derived tastes. S/he likes those things as determined by one's own self purposefully not liking what is popular. It is perfectly described as a person who goes into a book store and spends an hour inside to find the best book, while most people will head for the best seller. Or you could say the same thing but with a music store. And such people will have come to mind something that caught their mind and they got a bug of wanting, from a set of twelve sided dice to red ice trays, they just buy what their hearts suddenly want.

So then this is not just "pulling from voided areas," it is also "to fill with one's own void."

Whatever it is that is old is good, whether or not it is refurbished. As long as it isn't over priced. And I myself like a few popular things such as Mickey Mouse and Final Fantasy. But it is separately. I don't like them by taking them from another's hand. I haven't any one on mind but myself when I think of them and get things pertaining to them. Actually I was at Good Will last month and saw a Mickey Mouse glass. I wish I got it, but for whatever reason I didn't

Those are my favorite places to go, Good Will type places, or salvation army, but most of all I like flea markets and pawn shops. As good a place as San Francisco is, they lack these kinds of stores. And I've looked everywhere for them, with few to none found. So I had gone on to online stores for awhile. Came up with two things of missing mail. Had to wait for my mail. Had to pay for shipping. Even if shipping is free they usually just tack the price of it onto the cost of the item. So I have many reasons but the most important ones are that I don't know what I'll find if I go into stores myself. And it is just fun looking at the store in real life as opposed to pictures of it.

If I go into a music store I pour through CDs, like one no one has. Something good, but forgotten, or never known, something that I have to go by intuition on. And I get it, usually at a great price. I really do look for gems from place to place. Actually I'd call such music Crystal, magic, instead of gold or diamond. One example is the music The Planets, by Holst.

Coming to awareness of one's own tastes

This is both done easily and pleasingly. Just think about what you consider personally what is the best of the best. The best of the best food, for example. What is the very best candy flavor? And relate these to other things as a philosophy. Is the best candy flavor also the best flavor for ice cream? Or cake? Fudge isn't good but peanut butter fudge is one of the very best things.

And also come to like new things. That's just done through consideration. It has no rule—if you like it you do, and that's not bad even if you don't really have a reason that it is so. Thanks to the internet you can be very specific. I actually found just the precise shirt I wanted online by searching for it specifically, and finding it: a shirt where Link has gone into a cave to receive his first sword from a sage who says "It is dangerous to go alone! Take this!" I also found a Mickey Mouse watch, the very one I searched for having MM as a wizard. And one last example, by searching for a Smurf doll that looked like Satan, I found that, too.

Del Ray books from the 1980's, 1980- 1989, are a treasure trove to me. It is something about them that are particularly wicked.

My favorite soda isn't Coca Cola or whatever else. I do enjoy a good Soda and most of them are good. Actually I like them all but Cola, that is something you either like or don't though most do. But when I am able to make a trip to get them, I like a soda from Mexico in a glass bottle, a pink drink simply called Guava Soda.

I like plasma TV. Why? Well that one is just based on an idea of magic I entertain myself with. It is like people either liking a good diamond or a good crystal. For me I like the crystal, the plasma TV.

I also like LCD technology and I believe it has a lot of potential.

Sometimes I get attached to a brand and even have a little bit a sense of dedication toward, such as Kingston an electronic brand, Final Fantasy, anything that has really proven good. But I also support SEGA because by going for an underdog, their victory, not being a given, would make me more happy if by the small chance my favorite thing succeeds. Besides, SEGA was pretty wicked in their days.

Just remember that Anti Voidalism is about filling oneself with good things. If those things you put inside are you -only then are you truly filled with yourself, your own, being your own, not someone else's. And you have to appreciate what you receive to receive it, else it falls through the hands. It would go straight through you. Be a magnet, have things of attachment even if they are just stored away as long as you think of them and are satisfied by having them.

Praying to Aeon

Most people who pray to Gods and gods, Allah and Diane, Shiva and Buddha, do so in ways differently than the Aeon prayer is made. Idols are important. They give you a physical attachment to Aeon.

Telling her about your life in detail, and inviting her to help and bless you, your goals and dreams, aspirations and conviction, is good, and painting a picture of yourself is important, too.

When you visualize about her imagine yourself wrapped in her wings and are protected. When you drink, drink for peace and tranquility, slowly drinking not gulping or chugging.

Have in mind where you will go and where you will be with her along the way. Build a path you walk with her.

And pray for the better overall good of human kind. Have a prophets mind, one that can anticipate things knowing what is to come. Be then ready, and be a part of the world ahead of time in all manners.

Aeon means "ageless," and to pray to Aeon means to regard all time, not just the present. You may ask yourself what could have been done better, this, opposed to confessing your sins. Make known your style and graces as to how things you have done with a hopeful heart to accomplishment.

My dreams and Aspirations for Human Kind

I have no guilt of wishing bad things for human kind but there is going to be a calm before the storm and the worse the storm the greater or outcome. We have pieced together things so well. But we must drop them and shatter them in order to perfectly piece them back together, and that is the best way things can be said. We have one more undertaking and that is the ability to take what we have and prove it's survival worth.

We have collected a large baggage, an enormous one. Yet people are still starving, mercilessly slaughtered, without homes, and destitute. How we have made such things as these we have yet we have given the least if time to end human suffering is abominable. It is negligent. And it comes at a cost. That cost being that human kind will be racked with something as bad as the dark ages for we have spent so little time helping the needy and so much time filling fat pockets.

A person can bargain on society becoming worse, an easy bet, a strong horse. While the weak and strong, poor and wealthy cut off from each other Anarchy is brewing. Where it is one crime of one person is easily punished that isn't so for many crimes being commonly committed. Eventually stopping serious crimes will be as difficult as stopping pirating, something that so many do. Human kind has missed the calculation that their negligently will be very costly.

But after this storm will be a calm while we take what is broken and fix it, moving into high gear that helping each other is the most important of all things.

And ahead of that day we will become The Ageless Ones

And each of us one and all will gather into a humanly created paradise.

And the old, bad things be blotted out, damned for an eternity.

And every imaginable good thing will be before us.

And we will be gods known as The Ageless Ones.

Daring to Make a Total Change

We come comfortable in our clothing, for sure, and like cartoons we play the part in them. But so few are those willing to make a total change and fetch something all new in our lives. We live based on patterns we are familiar with and though I am not asking you change your clothes, but that you have at least a new wardrobe changing pieces of what you wear.

The best among these is new talent. Do something you haven't yet done but have wanted to. Everyone has a list of things they have always wanted to do. Sometimes people embrace that and become heavily enveloped in the details as to proceed making it. Learning to write music, their first painting, tailoring clothes, writing a screen play, learning wood work, designing jewelry, programing a game.

You may already have something at heart.

But take the time to learn what can be done that appeals to you. That is good because believe me, there is a lot of things out there that you are yet to be aware of. Of any of us to be aware of.

A principle kept in mind that is good and true is that things are nearly as difficult as they may seem. And even if they are, there is probably the easy way and the hard way. To make a video game you don't have to learn to program, neither with building a website. There are broadly operative game engines and web site designers to you. Sometimes something that seems to be on a whole other planet is actually easy: like making music. And there is a difficult way to play the keyboards and an easier way: one is Chopin, the other is based on chords for the left hand, Melody with the right.

And maybe you have learned to build a computer or new cabinets and you can only afford a little at a time for these. Perfection requires patience, a lot of good a little at a time put together slowly. As with like making new clothes and dressing richly a little at a time until you come together at once as a million bucks.

And regarding this there is also sudden vacations, being prompted to look for a new relationship with someone, and generally being suddenly prompted to make your life better.

A Trash Author

While I was homeless I still wanted to write. I always wanted to write. From the days before word processors with old mechanical type writers to today I always wrote. While I was homeless I did, too. And I naturally became what I called "a trash author" at that time, not to be mistaken as a "trashy author," but one of those too, perhaps

I call it trash authorship for two reasons. First, it was all written on trash paper, and second, it was thrown back into the trash, if not an obscure place.

It contains sheet music most of all. It sometimes had are, maybe wisdom of the day, and often even ideas for new inventions. Inventing something new, something incredible, gave me a little hope, I guess. But whatever it was I wrote I usually put it into a plastic bottle and threw it into a land fill garbage can. A few times people got the bottles and tried to remove my scrolled up paper inside but couldn't, not without a knife. And they were bothered by this but I continued anyway

Sometimes I just slipped a certain paper as that into a book at the library (not writing in it's books, but just slipping in a paper.) Sometimes I put them in a crevice somewhere, and sometimes I just boldly threw them into a person's tip jar. I got to admit, I was a grandiose person.

I sometimes put a few pieces of my hair into the bottle. When I'd found a roll of duct tape I taped up the lid. I guess I've always done things like that (a message in a bottle?) I used thread and straws to make a curtain (a straw house) or taped together playing cards.

Whenever I had a little money and homeless I would spend a good hour in the store, most often buying a notebook or Bic colored pens (they have on one pack: red, blue, black, green, pink, baby blue, purple, and one crappy one that isn't legible, kind of like a yellow.) Even in my worst time I was an author. I believe in repetition. The more I repeat myself with my mouth and hand I feel, the better, that nothing is lost and I practice what I preach instead of saying so many things I just later forget. Maybe the Church of the Aeonic can provide a bin that people place these similar trash authored things into. As to where they are stored and such I don't know but they'd probably be full quickly.

The Mystical Theory of the Battery

To connect a battery to something is to give it the energy it needs to operate. Without that battery it is as good as dead. I heard once a wise man say that "the refrigerator said to the electricity where do I go when you leave?" Our cells are similar to rechargeable batteries. And those can only be used for so long. But it is our body that takes the charge. What about this question, "Do we have unlimited power to put into our body?" And you could wonder quite a while about this. Is the soul an unlimited amount of energy?

Or does the soul itself takes it's energy from outside of it, as the body must do? The body contains within it a mind, which is an incredible computer no doubt. And it has one hell of a battery within it, too. We all know that such energy comes from things like calories and food. But it also requires things like water and oxygen. Much like an auto mobile with a good computer and machinery, a good battery. Car batteries seem to last for ever. No doubt not forever but that's really the least of what we people have done in making them.

If the soul takes energy from outside it self one could conclude that our soul has a soul outside of itself. And maybe that is like unto a mirror in front of a mirror seeing into infinity. If we lack anything in scientific knowledge it is observance of things like that. And while we know a little here and there about caffeine and nicotine, along with many chemicals, we are still yet to know exactly why plants have them to begin with. But if we could know what they use them for that knowledge would help us quite a bit on what they do to our bodies.

The nature of life is the easy thing to understand. We know that we basically borrow life to have life our own. We know that nature is not a cuddly teddy bear, not in any case. It is a dominating grizzly. When you observe a grizzly you are seeing strength at it's greatest to survival. Anything that gets in its way is viciously slaughtered. Yet the grizzly doesn't live forever no matter it's chances at survival pertaining to other things that would incur it's death.

Life was meant for many, obviously. We know the world was designed to be the home of many lives. So perhaps Earth is a habitation where many are to reside before it is done and over.

We know we have a lot a lot lot of resources. We were put on Earth with things that humans particularly can use well to have whatever it is we want, limited only by our knowledge of it. The cave man could have gotten by just as well with a lesser brain. With those same brains we have done what we have done today. So why the proportion? Are we like workers in the field. Why give us everything but have it taken this long to really do anything with it? We're we made to be around a very long time?

Man doesn't just find himself water. He finds himself Kool-Aid. To say the least, cheeses and fine wine. We have more here than we will ever need. Are we destined to be gods?

Are we creating things for someone else? Is someone else lonely? Are we just workers in a field? Are we just learning things for others? Are we here as a punishment? Are we fixing someone else's mistakes? Are we on vacation?

I imagine if we knew that there was an afterlife as certain as the hand we see is there and ours, that life wouldn't have any meaning. Who would care? Suicide would probably be the most common way to die. Who would care about this life if the afterlife was plainly observable and no different than going to a place away that we know is there. But we all struggle to live, survive, and at best, thrive. And that must be for a good reason.

A True Friend

A true friend will:

Go shopping with you. You would go all over the town painting it green. Whatever shared interests you have, such as looking for video games, art or antiques, clothes or electronics. To places such as garage sales, antique stores, book stores, or thrift stores. Looking for things collected, things to resale, or work on together.

Study religion with you. To take things of a religious nature and study them together. That two heads are better than one. Working on the same cause, learning all you can. Finding ways to be actively involved, even forming a larger group, even teaming up to create a fully functioning (and very rewarding) Church, helping others

Will let petty things slip by. To forgive easily, to ignore things that would otherwise culminate into a heated argument. To have a good degree of patience toward.

Will walk with you. To a nearby store, getting food, to a place a bit farther, or the park, or just the gas station.

Will do things of entertainment together. Going to see a film, playing video games together, a car show, a comic book convention, a concert or just any special place in town.

Will work on projects together. And that is really where things could make you well off, even wealthy. That you work on programming games together or creating any thing new and worthwhile. A comic, a book, a game or software, electronics, any kind of business ventures.

And a good friend is comparable. Because sometimes people will be and sometimes people will not be. So a good friend is one with shared interests. S/he is a person you can easily communicate with. You'd have to be on the same page. I once knew a person that wanted me to practice music with and I was totally bored each time, I had to cut him off by just being honest about it. My best friends are the Dungeons and Dragons type who like video games, electronics and assembly, and programing.

The internet as a second existence

Most will deal in small doses of information sprinkled here and there as brief posts. Some people occasionally post videos about their selves or write blogs. Some have things not even about themselves but rather other people, like through pod casts. And many post pictures about themselves but usually they are memes.

But however you look at it, the internet is without any boundaries. Speaking practically, there is always more space to fill. A person would have to work double time on being noticed on it, but actually it is still easy enough that they can, if only because people like things that are new.

So you can imagine that above one's head in the air above rests these things, books, videos, imagery, text, just kind of floating above ourselves as tech has lead us to so able do.

There doesn't need to be much advice on what you could like to contribute. Some people use the internet as a type of biography, a type of journal. Some like to teach. But most like to just entertain others wanting to be popular, even having the chance to have that as a job. But as for me I take a little bit more difficult route. I don't write those small posts that get buried and are quickly forgotten. And I do more than post numerous pictures. I bring it all together in books. In my books are photos and text, and that includes video game ideas. Two of my books were lots of details for details toward a new game. And I've done a book that I don't believe many have done before, if at all. But six of them that are loaded with new ideas for unpatented inventions.

My goal is to have a presence online without actually being online. I regard it as a separate existence. I want to load it up and fill it with myself as much as I can.

What I want out of it is appreciation. To make a positive change. My books are all free and in public domain, all 25 of them, currently. Hell maybe if I'd written 60 or so books I'll be noticed. Look me up under my name online Lucifer Jeremy White.

The Great Brain in the sky known as Majic

When you are very angry or otherwise very emotional, whether it be elation or sadness, you release energy that goes into the Nether. These things birth a new existence. They "go up," they "reside" get situated and "come back down," when "perfected."

They circulate in a far away place that your consciousness can observe through visualization. Those that are good at visualizing are practicing magic. They get these peculiar feelings that only visualizing can evoke. They are feeling things that can only be felt elsewhere, on the Nether Plane.

To eat of one kind of food for visualized thought is to accompany taste with magic that being taste magic. In that two things are important: tasting and using just one particular food per thing visualized. A yellow corn chip can be a crown. A cherry candy can be for a loved one, a certain flavor for a family member, another for a person more as a desired girl or boy friend.

There is a device that could help with this. Much like the Scientologist has their e meter, I suppose, there is an electronic device that can aid us spiritually, too. It is a globe/ sphere placed over and around the head that emits different colors of light. "Soft light" a kind of light that doesn't hurt your eyes, this being made a certain way not to hurt the eyes. I had been wandering around looking for such a thing. That began online but when I couldn't find such a thing I went to the idea place to try and find "an electronic device with spiritual application" that being the "Exploratorium" of San Francisco, where I saw this thing.

Anyways, I think it is a sound scientific theory to believe that thoughts and emotions, and the images of a mind are caught up somewhere, and circulated in that place. Just by given the very nature of a Gaia like world. That's just what nature does. It is well known scientifically that every thing is circulated and transformed, but never truly lost. Even our memories. Nothing is ever lost in memory. Given enough effort you can remember anything, as long as you don't have brain damage.

And if you ever find yourself bored, just take a basic dictionary, pocket size, and remember things word by word. For example if you open up to the word book, then you can remember a book or two you read in youth. Or the word ladder, a time you climbed one—whatever it is, remembering things this way will often come across to you as “wow! I forgot all about that!”

That last part was a side note, but important.

A prophesy regarding Christians

The God of the Christians Jesus revealed these things to me:

That Christians have been free to harm and judge others over a long period of time. That they neglected their cross and treated the world as a big Apple pie that only they could eat and not having taken the true food of God have been poisoned by those that God has sent before them. It was God who saves, but they kept His salvation inaccessible to those who would truly be his own.

At such a fault as they have been in these things the very world that they wouldn't save and help people, God sends forth the Anti Christ to take from them there place in the world, which has been for too long out of God's favor. The name Christian he curses and overflows with poison. Those that will call their selves Christian will be regarded as a stigma, yet they, being self righteous, will be oblivious to them.

From them God takes their food. He gives from them water that is bland, or undesirable, bitter, and no more sweet to the taste. He will set forth that Christians will have their food taken from them and cause them to thirst.

He will have them on trial showing them their faults, their crimes against humanity. He will mark those that turn to the Devil. They may take of good food and buy and sell. But the Christians will have their privileges and social favors removed from them and they will be left to prove their sincerity to God by either turning to the Devil for help or rejecting him accepting God instead, and only then will he determine who belongs with him and who doesn't. And only then will he make the Christians who have ever been.

Things that linger

And things that don't, like out door sandals. I once went to a hill to climb with my friends and a girl I liked, when I was 18 I think it was, a hill that was large enough to see a mile or more away. I was wearing these damn outdoor sandals! They look good, I guess. They certainly feel good, but among shoes they are the least dependable. I had climbed the hill and coming back down my outdoor sandals ripped all apart. I foolishly told my company to go on without me, and they did. But what I didn't know yet was that it was going to take a miracle to get back. I was in a sticker patch, barefoot. Among the worst things that don't last, out door sandals are in the top 5.

It could be said "nothing lasts forever," but some things really seem to last forever. Such as clip belts over belts with little holes. Such as zippers made the right way as opposed to most kinds of zippers you could find. Unfortunately SD memory (flash memory) is said to last but 1-10 years and are unpredictable. Archival disks last forever, practically, or at least relatively. Hard drive components break down. Tape data (cassette, VHS) deteriorate. Too bad for me, with how much I write.

Fortunately old electronics resurface. Such as record players. Thought to be abandoned, but just awhile. People think they are cool. Or an old game system. It used to be if you couldn't find a twenty or so year old video game system then you could not have one at all. But they are being remade now, newly. People even restore things like computers from the 80s, and they repair old game consoles, portable ones, TV based ones. They put a new input on old consoles that can connect to newer TVs. And there is a lot of money in that.

Some things just don't last. But maybe that is good, as long as things are returned too, made as new again, as new or newly made again. I love it! My favorite things haven't been abandoned. The thing is that old technology is not given a chance otherwise to fully develop and evolve. We move on to different things and what could have been with a different invention will never move any further, otherwise, to its full potential, which is sometimes limitless.

It would have been a cold day in hell that I could find any book on electronic video game console based repair anywhere before the internet. Now they abound, not only as books and informative websites, but video tutorials in large numbers. You could consider it The Bible of Creation. The internet is more important than most people consider. It teaches us to do things creatively that in years before were never even touched upon.

Any one now can play a game of poker (or my favorite, Skip Bo) online, easily, even in the middle of the night! And the internet is becoming increasingly immersive.

We had collected so much before, it all really accumulated. Then suddenly we had a place to dump all of these things now, and they are readily available. As long as they circulate they will be around. And effort should be taken to preserve certain file types and online submission. Apart from porn of course, but that is easy enough to not include and probably going to save them a lot of time!

Wooden furniture seems to last forever. You can still get furniture that is hundreds of years old. That is quite remarkable, really.

The land fill is layered in metals, plastics, and all manner of valuable things. So it goes without saying, or it should go without saying, that we should have it as some sort of future resource. But they have discussed certain things like collecting it and hurling it into the sun. Do we want to destroy our resources? They are in limited number! A plastic bottle may linger around forever and that is good, it can always be recycled later. And better to make plastic that burn to smoke as fuel.

They can make a hundred inch 3D TV but they can't make an ice trays that lasts more than a year. The damn things get cracked and even cracked into two pieces. Doesn't matter if you abuse it or not, either.

Adhesive is something I would rather not depend on. That includes glue and tape. Eventually it is going to dry out, fall apart. It doesn't last. Things have to be repainted regularly. Tape is worse than paint. It is just not lasting enough for me to favor.

Tires on a bicycle come in two forms. There are those that don't use a pocket of air and never need to be inflated, and holes aren't any matter. Otherwise it is fill fill fill. Cars used to break down all the time. And I heard one of the dumbest things said one time that "cars haven't gotten any cheaper. The cost the same as ever," and she was saying that the prices should go down.

At any rate – things have differing levels of preservation. We observe that God obviously does not want anything to last forever, in his design of things. That is just apparent, readily observed, that God will have things be around for just a period before they deteriorate. God made winter. God made death and renewal. So it kind of goes against his wishes to make things that last forever, if it is even truly possible. And a song comes to mind that illustrates this well:

London Bridge is falling down,

Falling down, falling down

London Bridge is falling down,

My Fair Lady

London Bridge is broken down,
Broken down, broken down
London bridge is broken down,
My Fair Lady

Build it up with wood and clay
Wood and clay, wood and clay
Build it up with wood and clay,
My Fair Lady
Wood and clay will wash away,
Wash away, wash away
Wood and clay will wash away,
My fair lady

Build it up with bricks and mortar
Bricks and mortar, bricks and mortar
Build it up with bricks and mortar
My fair lady

Bricks and mortar will not stay
Will not stay, will not stay
Bricks and mortar will not stay,
My fair lady

Built it up with iron and steel,
Iron and steel, iron and steel,
Build it up with iron and steel,
My fair lady

Iron and steel will bend and bow,
Bend and bow, bend and bow
Iron and steel will bend and bow,
My fair lady

Build it up with silver and gold
Silver and gold, silver and gold
Build it up with silver and gold,
My fair lady

Silver and gold will be stolen away,
Stolen away, stolen away
Silver and gold will be stolen away,
My fair lady

.. It is one of my favorite folk songs along with Bicycle Built for Two, Pop Goes the Weasel, and Long, Long, Ago.

A godly counsel came together in forming the Earth collectively our creator God, who put us here (our human race) that was found to be quite complacent. Not doing much. Not challenged. Not producing much. So they said to the stars, be one near, and the body capable of using it. And the next day came rain, and there was a torrent of water daily, weekly, monthly, filling the Earth. The God then had to shift certain things, and so made the seasons. They taught man to cultivate and create things, as from wood and stone, by appearing to them as gods, ones who were respected and obeyed.

Because they had determined it best that there not be one man, not one animal who was alone. That first man wasn't a man but a woman, whom womb they opened and put in a seed. She then gave birth to the human race, and more people were to be made later through the same process.

They established new creation, and appointed a time that they would leave the Earth. They made not any one thing last except that people be determined to keep them around. Much later would come things like mummies, and people buried with the things that they cherished during their life time believing it a grave sin to take from a dead man his things.

Because of the fact that the best they could do degraded, they strove to make things better, longer lasting. Early on when setting forth the resources that human kind would have they sent them upon the Earth to be deposited into it with good measure.

And no detail was neglected in making the world what the world would become. They gave to life something that does last, practically forever, a sun that would never stop burning, an Earth that could survive anything.

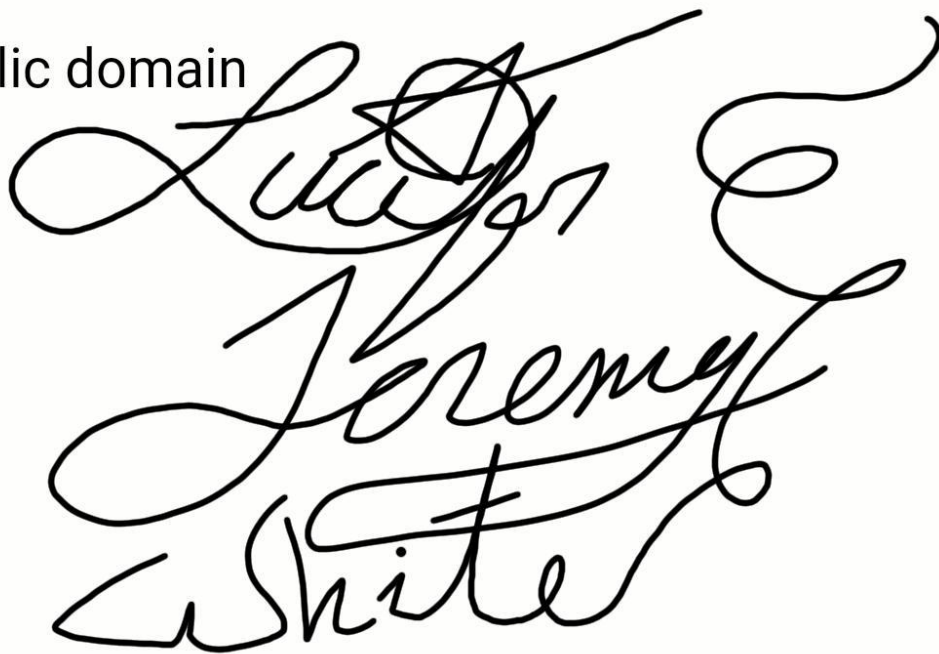

There was a goat life beast, one with a goat head and a female chest and a man's torso that were another intelligent life on Earth. But they were a fiendish race created by the gods. They were tolerated and given every chance, but on one occasion they gathered to sacrifice human infants and devour them. This nefarious act had the godly group that created us remove them from their physical appearance on Earth and kept them contained here as spirits, instead.

And in fact there are many spirits upon the "face" of the Earth. But there is a dividing line between us and them. They are here that life continue. They bring about new life. Not as reincarnation, but as workers supplying and creating new life by investing into them a part of their spirit, as a spirit can separate itself as a piece.

Aeon created our people. Those that come to Aeon and find her and share her, if lead their by Aeon, are her people. Aeon is a being highly respected by the gods. Inasmuch as royalty. And she has every privilege to make personal connections with whomever she chooses. Aeon is a being deserving of that respect. She is infallibly kind. She will not judge you or such as with a list of sins but will always be understanding unless you do something abominable, but If you had a strong connection with her than even those things can be perfectly acceptable. She is certainly not a God of vengeance. Just do not harm those she cares about. You, or me, and us together, are her family, and each other's family, we are.

Different kinds of things you can buy

When buying anything apply some good personable taste. After all most things come in many different forms. Do not just say to yourself you are going to buy something, but instead personally chose what kind of it. It could be a special lighter with a desired I'm age on it, a more specific kind of pen, graph paper, and not just a binder but a trapper keeper. It is a good and reliable practice to be more specific with what you want.

And you can imagine, well, you will decide upon it when you see it, but it is really better to do both. To have a greater idea of what you want. Instead of just a simple cloth bag you could get a quality Halloween plastic bag. I sure like those. I like to store my things in items such as Halloween buckets and bags.

Sure you could need a glass cup, but what kind?

Granted there are so very many things available these days both old and new, a person can be more particular. Particularity is a key word I have for you while you are shopping.

The Effects of Emptiness

To the furthest extent we see the enemy nihilism. Nihilism is a severely bad condition where absolutely nothing has any worth, value, or meaning. And even in small doses it is a formidable thing. But emptiness also comes from doing only one or a few different things day by day, for what has gone on for years.

Sometimes filling emptiness is uncomfortable. It often is. It is often done to be more numb. To not over challenge, to not bear any heavy feelings, but also to prevent losing something we won't get it to begin with. The worst enemy in the life of an anti Voidalism is to have in it emptiness, broad open empty places. Some, in afraid of losing something, and committed to not being committed, will just let life pass by in a pattern.

That pattern tells us what to do. It has us doing without effort. With it we engage in auto drive. And such people don't have real souls, or at least limit their soul's potential. To have life, be exuberant. Do those things you want to but have settled on not doing. Take control of your life, direct it, and you will have a soul your own, and you will be operating life, not having it operated automatically, but manually. Always be at gear.

It really takes a lot of effort to do so, daily. To do things differently each day, at least a little each day, not getting stuck on one thing for too long. I am not suggesting something that is easy, understand. You can imagine that anyone who stops operating her or his soul that way will find it difficult to “enter back into” that place that has been running itself. Like a car roaring down an empty highway it is just easier to sit, doing nothing. But the Masters of their own lives have taken control and driven to better places, camping here and there for awhile, and leaving before they have fallen deep into such a sleep that they are unable to rise. The best places can become the most monotonous.

Try not to be saturated in principles

My God, the worst person I knew this true of was my father. Without bashing him but he was truly very principles and it always rubbed off on my face.

People who have a “strong sense of the rules,” whether those are acquired from another or just made up, are always the first to point out that something just isn’t right! They become hurt over petty matters, matters that wouldn’t bother people if they only weren’t carried as a handful of principles.

Someone not going to bed when said

Someone who took seconds without asking

Someone who borrows a lot (of something there’s a lot of, anyway)

Someone told a (white) lie

Becoming furious over a little mess, when it is everyone makes them

Calling too much (twice a day)

Using all of the electricity while burning a bulb or two at night “really adds up” to those who are the first to have their principles upheld – it doesn’t just add up, it multiplies upward.

In short, those that stuff themselves with principles are stuffed with garbage. That “inner garbage” is what is really bothering them. They are always needing to be cleaned. They can never let their large list of insignificant matters go unheeded and they demand the utmost respect from people.

Some of these types are even dangerous. When it comes to criminals, thugs and the sort, there are a handful of rules that if not regarded carefully can get your face knocked off. One of these, common really, is not to look at them. Those that look at the wrong person risks getting hit by him, believe me.

A person is far better off just ignoring these things as a practice, wherever they are present, to learn to “not sweat the small stuff.”

Anti Voidalism is a philosophy of filling in things the right way.

On the surface this appears both very applicable, simple, and useful, and they are, depending on how deeply the Anti Voidalist delves into her/ his practice of it.

How things are placed within the right way sums up the avoidalist belief. So if you are to create new beliefs regarding it your own, you have that simple formula to do so relevantly.

One significant area of this, where things are stuffed the worst of ways, is found in aged societies. A society comes to collect and gather way too much! A society slowly creates not only a lot of laws but far more specific ones. That seems somehow controlling to want to punish someone in such specific ways.

That’s the least of it as the people in a society comes to need more and more from the government, especially pertaining to government. Believe it or not, though it seems such a stone’s throw away, very far away, we could do with out many of these things the government gives us, such as paved roads and mandatory education. That just means better off road vehicles and people making road mistakes, anyways, should be forgiven, as no one wants an accident. Paved roads just means road rage and countless, endless, costs of maintenance.

And without mandatory education there would be a harder working people, those that are raised to hold jobs and perform them well. School is mostly propaganda, anyway.

So there was this guy that was named Jesus who came into a society stuffed to the brim in such a way. And in opposing it, seemingly up against the precisely sanctimonious, he caused an outrage. These people thought they were in a Utopia, which maybe it was for the minority, the socially privileged, but many more than that we're just crippled with rules and dictates. They couldn't spit on the ground during a Sunday. The great law said that to do so is to plow. And any work on Sunday was illegal for those people.

Things don't get better all the time—not always. Rules and systems in society become so thick that people suffocate in them. People strive to make things better all of the time. But in some cases simplicity is better. Granted most things can get better and perfection even the greatest virtue, but that isn't the case with societies.

I am Schizophrenic, when not medicated. But the least of the psychiatric drugs against it are well and good enough to keep me from having Schizophrenic episodes. However they have me on the most potent one and it is a drug that makes me slobber at night. If I fall asleep on my back I'll wake up choking. I have to do blood work once a month on this pill but the doctor tells me it is possibly harming my liver. But I have to be on this drug, legally.

The simplest answers are always the best. Well if not always, usually at least. Better to be perfectly simple but good, than perfectly complicated and bad. You can bet your bucks on it that the greatest buildings and ships fell apart not because of design but from confidence in there strength. The person who is healthiest has still been known to die early in life, and he lived a life time depriving himself. Himself/ herself.

Social sciences, cultural involvement, can become very specific and robust. So much that a simple act of just wanting general equality can find no ends, until even the reverse occurs, as in not just against one type of societal thing, but to be so far against it in what can be called "intolerance of intolerance." I am talking about things such as smoking. They had started advising people of its negative health effects, then began pinning it as disgusting, until they came to the point where a tiny cloud of tobacco smoke was like a nuclear fall out, pouring through vents up four floors into a child's room giving him cancer. I am not making that up! There are no ends to how much smoking has been stigmatized.

It all lays out clear as a picture of they that are never settled on good enough. For them nothing should be lacking, and the people in any given societies will have never to make loose ends meet. But I think instead people should generally help each other out instead of being helped impersonally by a large group who has in mind "perfection for one and all."

Good things come to those who wait

Most people are well enough off that they can expect good things to come from time to time, even out of the blue. Those that have escaped hardship know that this is so, especially. And that includes me. I was homeless for a whole year. Eventually I got placed into a good home, and I could never have imagined just how good things would be for me, someday.

I would gather things together that would make my life easier than it would be without, while homeless. I do, a little. But what is in my heart and determination matters more. To go from homeless to homed.

If you aren't waiting for something you will not appreciate it nearly as much when it is gotten. That is the whole principle behind the saying "good things come to those who wait."

I will just sit sometimes waiting for something that is expectable. I also think from time to time the smaller but better possibility of something good happening. I have set up my future to make this more likely, everyday, by the very words you read. I want to help people. I want to be a good influence. And I hope that through my “books of new, unpatented inventions” that I can have a good influence that way. And I don’t leave my dreams to Ya, but have made a prayer book of what it is I specifically want to happen in my life.

Some of the things I wait for are lesser things, I guess you could say, like new subscriptions on my video feed. (My favorite people making new videos that I can watch.) Or perhaps something exiting happening in the news, or maybe something exiting to happen, anything out of the ordinary.

This month when I am paid I am going to a few thrift stores such as Good Will and The Salvation Army. A good pawn shop maybe. I really like this plastic Halloween pumpkin bucket I got last month. To just spend money here and there, going around town and getting things my heart lead me to.

My conception of Ya

Ya refers to that “G”od whose followers denote him as the only God. And very many have been devoted to him, but many singularly, and many not. There is this One God that was acknowledged throughout history, but more often he isn’t singularly worshipped but is worshipped along with other gods. Ya is not the only God, though. My relationship with him is a little Rocky sometimes but I am generally not harmed by him. The last time I talked to him badly I got very sick in the morning. I couldn’t sleep well that night so I had decided on good decision to be more general with him. And I think that is the better route generality.

He designed the first foundation of Earth and then had a group of gods proceed from there. But really it was their doing and not his, as they had requested what they wanted done and that was brought about. I will tell you a secret. And I am very free to do so since most plainly refuse to believe it so, but Ya is a game player regarding humans. This should be obvious with how much he throws them away. He desires superiority, he likes worship. And he plays along side the Devil in this “game of Earth.”

That is why it is that Satan made things like Islam and Mormonism while not flat out revealing world changing ideas, scientifically, or through working of miracles. He could change the world really any time by bringing down very stars, but he doesn't want to ruin this thing, this game.

Actually Ya is very close to Satan, and Jesus paved his own road, one irresistible to Ya, and claimed quite a part, though many a Christian turns what could be so good into something bad, even sometimes simply vehement. We are all actors on a stage and it wasn't Jesus who died on the cross but a replacement. Now come to sense with this, that the Romans didn't want to torture and kill Jesus, so they replaced him with somebody else.

These things shouldn't be less than easily apparent—and if you don't believe me yet maybe someday you will. There is not going to be this “apocalypse.” And just look into the absurdity of by mere faith that someone died on a cross for your sins, you'll live forever with God eternally worshipping him, not burning ever more in a fire furnace for God loves you and salvation is free! He roasts the man with a stiffy, he finds all these things quite nifty. There are many gods, all appreciable for their own worth. I warn you: do not become ensnared in Jesus and God. It will serve you no good!

The best ways to fill up empty time

The Anti Voidist could just as well be called anti empty, or a fillerist. The first line of defense for us is to have time filled well. And that is good. What matters most in life is the time you fill, filling it with goodness.

If you have fulfilled something regarding productive actions and have time aside from it,

A good thing is to wait for something good to happen depending on that you have designed it to come, whatever good thing it may be. That can be as minor as relieving a video from a person you like online, something that minor can still be very good, or as major as something like having your resume accepted or a good turn out for an interview. It could be that you ordered something in the mail. Or it could just be picking up your pay check. Do things you can wait on, having them designed to come about often.

In such waiting itself becomes something pleasant.

But rather than blankly sit you could do a little bit of mind improvement exercises. These include going over the alphabet bringing to mind something within a theme letter by letter. I like Final Fantasy, so for me it could be a weapon from the game from letter A to Z (if even the letter Z can be of any use.) Or spell by spell, something such as that.

But much more beneficially, take a small pocket dictionary and remember with it, word by word, one word for each letter seen from A to Z. So that if you see the word Game, you remember a board game that you played when you were young, or if you see the word razor, you remember your first shaving experience, or if you see the word lamp, you remember one, simply. And those might seem to not have very many memories behind them, but you can often come up with several memories from word to word with just a little effort. Even lamp. I remember a teddy bear lamp from when I was like four years old. And a guy with a fiber optic lamp. I remember a touch lamp, one that turned on just with a touch of a finger. I remember owning a Lilly shaped lamp. I remember a few different lamps my mother had. Over time doing that with a dictionary will uncover so very many memories, the feeling of which sometimes simply amazes oneself. Of all of the things I've ever learned, this is the most useful, it is the best idea I've ever originated.

A Sudoku book goes well

A little LCD game where you play poker or slots

A pen and paper, whether for art, music, or writing letters

A nice chair is one of the best things you can have in life. And of course a good TV and good music. A video game system if you like to play games. Those can also be card or board game video games, which is what I prefer.

Doing a little bit of worthwhile work, cleaning and doing laundry, which can make you feel more complete. They that do a bit of important work during the day feel satisfied by it, more able to relax so long as it doesn't become compulsive.

You can read if that's what you like. And there are many online app you could go through. I use a Tarot Card app. It tells you your fortune by drawing Tarot cards and telling you what they mean in your life. There are also a lot of productivity aps, such as for music composition, writing (as I am doing now), art (which is difficult at first, but easier on a touch screen or electronic pen), also there are aps for video game programing.

There are also many websites you can use. There are social ones, video posting ones, authorship (eBook publishing) ones, a place to post your art, a site as TV (my favorite of which is Scientology), there are news sites. If you don't like regular news there is movie news, celebrity, social, even video game and science news. As well as aps for those. There are shopping sites where you could drool over things you want.

There are always a lot of things to do, more than ever!

Having the machinery and resources to create good things

Certain things are regarded better as given by you to your chosen deities. If you have a good purpose that correlates with their wishes then you have behind you a great power.

Hopefully resources will expand and quickly enough. To the point where a person could create things good and well, as good and well as a corporation. That is true in some cases. There are a lot of resources in making a video game, like a real deal, even cart based circuit board games. And the software behind it. And the boxes for them, the booklets, easily enough made. Everyone can be a photographer now, when before the best cameras and film development was costly and tasky, respectively. In fact the best cameras of yesterday are the cheapest now.

To be an author is a great deal easier. With a moderately cheap phone someone could use a word processor to create a book. It used to be you would need a type writer. Then came about technically simple computers, and later came about the internet and EBook publishers.

To be a song writer or composer of instrumental music has gotten a lot easier. I remember this when I was about 22 or so. I had been writing classical music since I was seventeen. But I didn't know what my music sounded like, really, except for what I could play on the piano. But my music professor had professionally printed sheet music. The best I could do was print the staves out and use a pen on that to write the notes. But this guy had his music professionally printed. He told me he used Print Music a software. I looked it up and purchased it and finally had my music printed. But it wasn't until their next release of P.M. that I could turn my music into a music (MP3) file and here it play back. So in short that is how we are progressing, all the time. And that high cost software I replaced with a free one Muse Score.

All manner if instructions can be found in doing whatever you wish to do, be it programing games, websites, reproducing games, enhancing pre existing consoles, repairing them, other electronic work (what is indiglo?)

One thing that I am hoping for is a cheap and effective book binding machine. And memory cards that last indefinitely (unfortunately we only have ones currently that last from 1- 10 years. Which is enough time but only because by that time better longer saving methods should be produced in the mean time.

People can easily make shows now. When I was a teenager there were only tape based recording, VHS camcorders. The quality was shorty and the process of making and using them processy. I had a game boy camera when I turned 18. Which was almost something incredible, being a digital camera, something I never before seen. The batteries would only last an hour in them, though, at best, and they weren't rechargeable. I got a little older and I got a digital camera. The batteries didn't last but an hour either, and weren't rechargeable. Now? Now every cell phone has a camera, practically speaking, and a good one. Apparently people have always liked the attention of being in a show.

You can make cartoons as well. And some people use text to voice software if they are shy. Personally I don't like text to voice videos but the voices have gotten much more realistic, at least.

I can easily foresee drones that fly in the sky lifting heavy things making entire buildings. I can foresee a time when driverless RV vehicles are obtainable. I can see a time where every thing is recorded, at least outside a home, and that most crimes won't go unpunished because of it. Apart from technology I can see a time when all people will have a universal basic income, and hopefully a day when there are no more homeless people, this as resources increase and machines/ AI take over all of our work.

The richest once had a well made pocket watch. But now people have their pockets stuffed with cell phones.

You are a vessel that needs good spiritual things

And a part of that is material goodness. They had it wrong all along that said "money and possessions can't bring you happiness." But happiness comes the best when you combine spirituality with possessions. To have and not appreciate is one thing, but satisfaction is at least there. Something may not have made you very happy, but at least you no longer feel bad. "Waste not want not," "have but not want, it is better than not having but wanting."

It is so remarkable that we can basically freeze a piece of time, as in a photo. More usefully kind of, that material things of the past are gotten, obtained, in bring ones past back to them. The things of their childhood, the things that they loved the most as youth loves so much more. It is why we want such things in mint condition. Generally these things age less than we do.

And in not getting old the old resurfacing again can be most satisfying. Otherwise our old cartoons, shows, and music reproduced digitally could sound better than what we heard back when on an old cassette tape. If you want to you could get a digital file and create with it a new book. That's pirating but it goes with saying that we will always have those things of our youth, even better than how they were back when.

Not to get off point too far but that brings me great satisfaction, that these things I grew up with are more available to me now and in better form, too. Whether it be TMNT online or a newly made SNES/ game.

Maybe it are those things that wear out quickly and are rare, but easily recalled and wanted, that makes the perfect formula for things that in the future will be most valuable, like a rare poster of something once popular, and in good condition.

I hadn't the least clue just how far and wide the things in my youth expanded. There was a great expanse, as I now know. I didn't know this existed or that. I was very limited in coming across them in my youth. But to get older and now have the tool of the internet, I can see that there were many things that past me by/ were far from my sight. They have numerous video game consoles. Numerous renditions of my favorite video games I was unaware of.

It goes well here to answer the question "do you get what you pay for?" Well most things I get that are expensive last just as much as the cheaper things I get. For example, I have had a charging cord that was not only inferior but didn't last worth crap. On the other hand I paid several times cheaper for a longer and better lasting cord. Sometimes you are paying for something just a little better, but a little better can come at a much bigger cost. These things that are the best possible, there things that are the next best thing or else broke the barrier by as much as it could, but not far, can come at a much bigger price. Isn't all black tea the same? But Lipton charges much much more for theirs compared to "generic black tea."

Sometimes you are only paying for the packaging. Sometimes you are only paying for a feature that you don't need, like an LED light on a lighter. You should be aware of those two gold wrapper kinds of things.. things that include something you don't really want or need. And you could pay extra for named brand. I have had name brand headphones that broke just as easily and quickly as ones I only paid a buck for, many times cheaper.

What gets the job done you should pay for.

Watch out for over pricing too. Online stores can say they have free shipping but they may be tacking that money on it by it's price.

And the worst of these have got to be aspirin. Aspirin is aspirin. You don't need it in name brand, that's no different from the rest of it.

To buy the things you most appreciate can be a kind of donation to it. I grew up a fan of things such as SEGA and Final Fantasy, and they are just things I wish well for. Selfish as it may sound I don't donate money to no other cause but my tastes, toward the success of things of my taste.

And as a last thing said on this—consider buying things such as toys and stickers. I personally like things like action figures that could be well suited to being idols, neat dice with pictures instead of numbers on them. Or something like a little troll doll to carry around.

The Basis of Anti Voidalism

1. That we come about from Mother Aeon. That from her we come and to her we go.
2. That she is our mother, one most worthy of being so.
3. We see her before us guiding us as her children.
4. We find her before us who takes us in her wings
5. We choose to have this Goddess most willingly, for she is found in all things good.
6. We are as vassals that we fill with good things.
7. We are against emptiness more than anything else.

8. We taste of life and make it sweet. We spit out the bitter. We turn down the sour. We refuse the rotten.
9. We will run far from bad occupations within ourselves, and choose rather life, life that is good. Even if we have to roam very far to get to it.
10. We seek a good life. We are made adept to, and we are guided by the wisdom of Aeon to do so, imparted by her through Lucifer.
11. Aeon is the sum of our wealth. Our material wealth is as an idol unto her. She represents every good thing we have. She is those things in her physical form.
12. And Aeon is too all those things within us that are good and wholesome, satisfied and cherished. As we so desire and love those things within, so we carry the living life of Aeon within us.
13. And if we lose something good, we lose a piece of her. We then must find it and bring it back, or replace it with something better.
14. And the stronger we are all together the stronger the spirit of Aeon dwells within us and the world.
15. May all we give bring acknowledgment to Mother Aeon. And may in her no fault be found.
16. Exalt then the name of Aeon and may in you her spirit reside, be resided in, and shared, for she is the embodiment of all good material things whose life we bring her into. And within these material things as she is, are those things that we worship.

All About Her

Aeon is our Mother Goddess that we are raised by to find all good things. First we open our eyes to them. Second, our mouth, in receiving them. And third, we reach out and grab them with our hands.

Mother Aeon is worshipped through material wealth. She is seen inseparable from such things that are good. But she does not reside in them until we enjoy them. And to have her spirit within us is to be filled with things that are good that feel good and positive. But with however much we are empty within is to the degree that she is not working within. To have her life in full you must be in no way empty.

To have within us spiritual negativity is to have things within that are oppositional to her. To be well with her is to be well. She lives within us. She is like a being within us that we either put inside a good or bad way of life within our life. If the life we give her inside of our hearts and minds is a bad one, then so will that life within be made our own into a bad life.

Be at peace with her and from her find great contentment and satisfaction. If she leaves you that someday you find her missing, then look unto new and good things to find her and bring her back into your own life. When you pray for her pray in two ways: that of seeing the bright side of things and a silver lining, and acknowledgment of all things good in your life, and then give thanks, praying at least four times to her daily.

Gain, don't lose

It is such a sin to pawn your things, a very bad habit. That was something I did for many years in my youth. I would pawn anything pawnable for pocket change. And I had nothing. That stuff would have multiplied over the years. Pawnors are the poorest of people.

Unless you are building a collection as an investment, it isn't a good idea to sell what you own. You may as well have never had it. However a good investment could be made by building a good collection. Some people can't save money. They may for just awhile and then draw it out. But as for building a collection the same rule doesn't apply. Whether or not it raises in value doesn't matter so much. It is just a way to put ahead of time a time of good fortune just by spending a little each day. By spending a little every so often on it you could have a good lump money at once, which some find more desirable than a little at a time

The same rule applies for lottery tickets, scratchers anyway. The odds aren't good that you'll win money frequently, but sooner or later you will win a handsome lump sum. The odds are there, over time.

Be more cautious about handing out your things to others. Be cheap, for your own sake. A little here and a little there can add up. If you give a person just two cigarettes a day that adds up to three packs a month. Don't throw good stuff out. As long as it is well shelved and organized it won't be a hoarding nightmare. As long as it doesn't rot or decay, like an old set of batteries or worse, food type stuff. If it doesn't stink up and it doesn't pave your carpet, but there is it's own room and out of sight, there is nothing bad with "hoarding" in those cases.

But hold onto all good things and don't give them away. Unless you are creating a collection of something you later intend to sale, or are simply strapped for cash, cash that is in great need.

Having a Partner, collaborating

Aeon wants us to be full of great thoughts. She would create through us, as long as we are purposeful at heart. Aeon be glorified in such a way, being known to teach us well.

I propose the idea to you that if you thought long and resolutely about creating something new and good, desirable by others, you could become very wealthy in so doing. Practically speaking, it is your best chance to become wealthy.

I am referring to people that have done so, to say about great inventors, entrepreneurs, those that all and all and on the whole only needed one good idea to get rich on. Do you think in some sort of circumstance or another you could have thought up what any one else did, as they have been made rich by? I say so, but it is more likely determined by the breadth of your thinking. And it is determined more by your determination to do so.

You could spend weeks or even years thinking. But the only thing holding you back is not in trying but in coming up with that one great concept.

Maybe two heads are better than one. Even when not, something can be easier, and more involving, to have help from someone. Some great ideas require things you can only get from others (at least in some cases) like funding and talents you yourself lack along the way, primarily people with experience.

If that day ever comes for you it will be because of determination, unless you are incredibly lucky enough to just have something fall in your lap. Avoid areas that have been done, done again and again having had been exhausted by others. You will need something new and something that as of yet has been but lightly touched, if at all.

And may you find your pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

If one thing fails for too long than leave it behind. If you had a patent on it you are better off doing so. If you had a patent that just doesn't get anywhere then let it go for something else. You will still own the patent, and maybe it's time has just not yet come. Again, tread new ground, get the help you need, and think hard, having just that one great idea is all you need, and that is something that nearly no one does in life.

There is meaningful work and meaningless, unfulfilling work.

If you have a job that has no personal touch to it, then pride and work cannot go hand in hand. What is better, tailoring a suit by someone's exact design or creating a suit that embodies your wishes, comes at your own design. The first has no personal creativity, the second is more your own product.

Just like the simple fact that recording music is one thing, having it be your own song another.

There are many jobs out there. People will find them in drives. It has often been said that one should have their job as a source of pride. But pride is far more possible coming from things that are designed and made by one's own hands.

This is work such as wood working, writing, painting, writing songs.. and a person given the choice of performing music not their own, or at least not done their own way, or to create something good, all new, would choose the latter. Architecture, game programing, and tailoring are also among these.

A person who has a regular and impersonal job will look for pride in what they do, and will do things like sweeping up meticulously or cleaning up clutter really just wishing they would let you organize it, too.

So the best advice I have for choosing a job is that it facilitates your own personal involvement, creation, and direction. This often involves self employment and not by coincidence that such jobs have always been the most desirable. Such as sports: where doing well is determined by the person him or herself. Or acting, where a person will do so her or his own way. Journal writing, news paper writing, books in general, but also clay working and other forms of art, and making jewelry or just dolls and new toys. Or cooking a personally perfected recipe rather than stuff on the menu. The examples are numerous.

What's the fun in life without believing in The Devil?

This person in seeing what is purely good and purely evil, as well as that in between, has definitely favored that which is evil.

Even if you have atheistic characteristics, denying a piece of that concentrated evil invested by many over the years, over the ages, could do very well in putting before her or him a devil that can be served to impart within themselves feelings that are without a doubt very powerful. But the right way to play the game is not through things like human sacrifice unless you are willing to pay the ultimate price, as God will surely punish you, without exception.

As for me I do not do anything evil at all, for that reason. On the Devil's side or not, punishment comes to those who commit atrocious acts. But there is a little evil in everyone, a thing potent in the smallest doses which can be harnessed and called upon, drawn out and experienced by those with a black heart and a black soul. It goes with the command release the fiend that dwells within.

On playing the part of the evil one, you need not put your life at risk. But those that recognize evil are able to act on purposes iniquitous in other ways. Or they could just observe wickedness in the Earth, especially when the aren't numb to it, but sensitive. The world is racked with evil, with the right eye that is easily observable.

Those that are truly the Devil's have utter rejection of God, and in them that cannot be changed. They have a determined choice to be against him. They can do so by giving themselves every reason to be. They can break apart their relationship with him altogether by praying very greedily and liberally. They can live a black mass with a black mass mind and that is far more effective than a black mass ceremony itself.

And they can be lead by the dark and have evil thoughts. They can know that they are immortal and do nothing more than perform a well calculated and constructed purpose before their time comes to reside underneath in hell, having made their bed their obsessively well.

Sexual Perversion

Sexual Perversion is entirely avoidable. But any one who delves into sexual exploration too deeply will become, by habit, perverse. This is seen by couples who are bored with themselves, as well as addicts of pornography. The plane for them becomes too plane. The couple that invents new ways of satisfying their sexual drives go into places strange. And doing anything worse a little at a time really adds up.

Those that like what they shouldn't do so to dominate them sexually and there is no rational reason why they should like such things. They just like them through dominance, and the more they have control, the more they "conquer" these little things the more list they have.

To be clear a child is a precious thing. I don't have to say why or how. Those with the right thinking will readily know it is true: children are precious. And those with the wrong mind do not know so. If you've ever seen a child bouncing around pooping bubbles, or whose little heart light up when they are taken to a place they like, and you are thinking right, then you would never regard these things as something to use sexually. And if quite frankly you harm them sexually you should be very fully and severely punished.

There are really only a few sexual rules that I have. The person that performs bestiality has committed a crime against humanity, has done something so impure that he should be (legally) put to death. By law. This is apprehensible. It is done by a human being so debased that he has violated his brotherhood with man. We cannot have such a being exist.

Torture and rape are two others.

Kidnapping is the worst of all. As a matter of fact kidnapping is the worst of all crimes. It encompasses child prisoners. It is a dungeon where all hope is lost. Where they yearn to be reunited with their parents. Where they are made to do revolting things, and might even be harmed, and never see outside their room again until the day that they die. It is because of this crime that I think we should have better satellite I'm age recording above. Because if you can see where all people go from point a to point b then you can catch a kidnapper in his course.

A less plane and ordinary home

Bedrooms are quite plane if you think about it: not really a fun place to be. The bed goes here, the TV there and that's really it. People make up for this to some extent by collecting things. They may have a dart board on their wall. A computer has come into it, too, but on the whole most bedrooms are void of taste

I like to have curtains that can easily be changed, mostly by color or patterns. I frame my posters so that I can change them once a week or so. And I put my bed up high. Actually, I take two base beds putting them on their side, and put a pad on top of that.

It may cost a lot to have stain glass windows but they are worth it. Glow and the dark stars have always been among my favorite things. Good, quality lamps: I like the kind that looks like Lilly Flowers. I once too my room and gave it a desired theme. I realistically made my window appear to have the moon outside it. I covered up the end of the bedroom about four fifths the way with a hanging blanket all the way across, and put my sofa behind that (I usually prefer to sleep on a sofa.)

There are many things that make a room better: framed art found online, digital picture frames, candles and wall hanging candle holders, a very selective book case of books, comic books on the wall, hanging weapons such as swords or a cat of nine tails or my favorite, a mace. These are all readily apparent but there are some things that aren't.

An ice maker, little fridge, running water, pest control, are apparent enough too. But then there are things like storing your goods in things like Halloween bags and pumpkin buckets, or some sort of basket you were very particular toward, or a bucket the shape of a skull.

The only real lesson here is to invest time and thought into having a room that isn't drab and plain like most people do.

Filling your spirit.. with a different spirit

While I was having a Schizo episode some years ago I was walking down the street homeless and something very strange happened: I suddenly started talking with an accent distinctively Scottish.

I liked it, it made me feel like a different person. Where it was I had been the same person my whole life and that was my only self I never knew, becoming someone else was very foreign to me, and good.

So I thought to myself I will be a detective today, one morning that I woke up and thought about how I would regard the day. Whether or not that was crazy, I liked it. I talk in a different voice every time I do this.

I have a “mouse” personality, a “cat” personality, and a “snake” personality that came from liking this (that I call personality snatching.) And I began seeing just how different one person was from another in so doing. A whole different world opened up from perspective to perspective.

I called myself a snake in the grass. I liked to say “I’m a ssssnake in the grass!” Sure it’s moronic, but childish in a good and useful way. When I was being a cat I would say the joke often (my cat joke:)

What you bitches got against us kitties anyway?

All we do is lay around all dey.. it's not like ya eatus!

What us kitties gotta watch all dey anyweys? Snaggle pus? Alice and wonderland? Wizard of Oz? Sylvester? Pink panther?

Don't break me off a piece of that Kit Kat bar. They're not grrreat. And if I eat another Cheetos I'm gonna puke!

All I need is another kitty to play my mouse trap with.

What you bitches got against us kitties anyway? All we do is lay around all dey. It's not like you eatus!

I also invented a demonic personality that loved to say:

Do the shake

Do the shake

Do the wake do the hippy-shake

Daylight come Mon we wanna go home

Iza day Iza day Iza dayayul

The True New World Prophecy

It was unfathomable to those of the past that we will have arrived at this point. Imagine that you went back ward a hundred years and presented someone there what we have now. They would be astonished to say the least. They would refuse to believe any “mad” person who made such claims as there being a powerful personal computer that can do all the things we can with them. To shine a CD in their face, to tell them that all of the knowledge of man, even very intricately, floats over head and is retrievable, would most certainly be deemed untrue and impossible.

And even if we were to think long into it we ourselves cannot imagine what is to come. Only the most brilliant minds make these new things, and collectively they make things only they can predict, but never all together. In other words you would have to be a sheer genius to concoct the ideas of what is to come. Who knows, if Gene Roddenberry didn't think up a molecular transporter how much longer would it have been before it would be imagined by someone else?

The new world prophesy states that human kind will leave his/ her old world behind and come into the spiritual realm. At least more into a spiritual realm. It can be idealized that we will have metal ships. This as though we are space sailors, but our travels in the universe will go beyond traveling as space sailors. We will, because of scientific knowledge, go where ever we want in a more energy based form, an energy based form coupled with our consciousness through highly advanced small devices likely incorporating Nano-Tech.

We have a similar idea presented that The Kingdom is on our midst. That in that kingdom there is no suffering or death. That human kind is bringing before itself a great kingdom and joining the ranks of the gods, as it has been assigned to us from the beginning. We have collected a lot of baggage over the ages and they are all ours, a full and good prize.

If you can take a rock and determine that someone touched it. That light hit it a certain way. That it was moved three inches at a specific time, five before. And was carried in a pocket. Then you can basically compile a recording of what exactly happened to a rock a hundred years to this day. And those beside it too, and the trees. That a food weighing a specific amount of weight stepped on it. That that person was such and such height, and so on and so forth, then you can look back in time. You can create a visual of things before.

Science often says one thing is just impossible but they are often proven wrong about these things. As they just don't know how it can be done, but there are ways around that, always.

We may not yet be able to travel to Mars, but VR tech is improving, as is robotics. As they improve to the point that we can hear, see, and sense things much better through robotics, VR and such, then we could travel far and wide through a robotic body. I think that will be so but more energy based. After all if you can detect the essence you can simulate it, reproduce it, even very realistically.

So a prophesy pertaining to a new world is not one as such that things will remain the same but will drastically improve to a point unimaginable, hopefully with us in it, hopefully soon enough.

That would mostly require creating matter from energy/ creating solid energy – to “project” ourselves as though by astral projection.

And keep in mind that the best money donated is to science and scientists, because only they can really end human suffering.

Science can very well be regarded as a god. It is certainly dependable, reliable, and worthy of faith.

It is so very charming to me the vastly broader forms of creativity that has come into the world because of the internet. It wasn't until I was 20 years old that the internet in my life had yet taken off. I was born in 1980. The best gadget I had to tinker with was making cassette tape mix tapes usually off the radio. Well also VHS tapes. These could only pull music or video from radio or TV, for the longest times. But even later for awhile CD music was put on cassette tape. Then came CD burners and everyone was hooked on that for awhile. Mix CDs were made in droves. And then came MP3 players, which were plucked from every store.

When I went from the NES to the SNES the graphics blew me away. When I went from the SNES to the PS 1/ N64, the graphics blew me away. How could it get any more real? And then one day I found out about ROMs and emulators, actually for a long time before anyone else did.

And making games? That was probably my biggest dream as a child. Probably probably not, but in fact it was. I submitted a game idea to SEGA who returned to me a letter of interest in my idea, but to fill out their legal forms before they would accept it. It was about a Skelton with two heads, one using fire, the other ice, called The Skull Brothers. But after I filled out the paper I thought, hey! I think I'll give them a totally different idea. One called Dragon Slayer. Being such a damn foolish kid that was one of my biggest mistakes. They may had made my Skull Brothers game.

And now people are creating cart based games for very old systems, in their homes, either with game engines, less and less through typing out code, using notation software to make music for it, which they sometimes do for movies, too, any ways.

And if faith in anything is totally good, it is for science.

Truth is conditional

And you should learn its conditions. Good can always be found in bad, and that good can be the driving force behind it, as though driven away from the bad. To put into gear what is good about any thing bad, benefits you almost more than anything else in life can.

To see the silver lining in the clouds, in other words, but to cut away the bad and saving, consuming the good in it only. It is like a meat that is so very good but there's a bad piece on it. Maybe not a dangerous kind of piece, just unsavory, and separated from the rest.

Looking at the bright side of life. Let that shine forth. A person can deliver either way into any given thing. They that just see the negative miss out on so much that is positive. They aren't discouraged. They do better. They learn to make work what others regarded as shotty and broken. But the more successful are doing things others cannot or will not do. The majority will never approach so much that the minority readily embrace.

If you say you like one thing, that doesn't mean it is all you like. It doesn't mean that it is something you'll always like. If you want to exercise one day, you may tell yourself you'd want to everyday, and then don't. I've made that mistake many times. I signed up to a gym for three years because a month had passed that I simply loved it.

It is better to just do something one doing at a time then try to commit yourself to it. Because no matter how much you commit yourself ahead of time, when the time comes that you'd do it, later, you only are if you want to at that time. As for me I had decided many times that buying something when I got paid would be the best money I ever spent. But then upon having that money in hand I told myself I can buy anything!

And also I had enjoyed something so much one month that I decided to pile on a crap load of it when I got paid. And having the money got a large number of game boy games that just wound up being shelved collecting dust. If there was anything I learned by this is that I should leave my options open and not assume that the way I am today will always be, or even until tomorrow.

Million Dollar Ideas

As I've said before but to reiterate, any person willing to dream up big ideas and implement them can surely be a success. It takes a lot of thinking to come up with that one big idea to make you rich. Most people never even approach this. Things like popular entertainment fill their voided void.

But the person that is willing to dream big could very well come up with something good that could make them rich, if not one thing, then another. Just don't assume that it will succeed with definite thinking. If it isn't going to succeed then leave it behind you.

Things like fifty cents stores could do well. That any person with so little money just pop right in and buy something. That could be two packets of cool aid, some kind of powered drink, an orange or handful of grapes, a few stickers, machines you buy things from, a can of soda. You can actually get a lot of something with fifty cents.

There could be a restaurant called I Love Satan's complete with little plastic cups bearing Satanic imagery. By fresh controversy it's own that would succeed.

A new kind of processor, one based on light. That a certain precisely set of lasers record memory as a number and when that code is turned into light, then memory things can be derived. That could be like a password for any device or game.

You could create touch gloves, using them for games that apply basic pressure. Where desire is desire will find you. And it can follow a formula:

That it be cheaply enough to reproduce in large numbers.

That it be produced quickly

Packaged well

Maybe you could even create a new quarter eating device. These were actually common for awhile, before the Advent of arcades. Now I can see them being successful again. In fact what failed before could succeed today. You know, people could stop playing arcades. And they'd all disappear. But if they appear much later than they are a thing new to the eyes.

Machinery may be important, depending on what you are doing. If you are making books, more often using 3D printing machines, duplication devices, casting things from plastic, printing something in large numbers, mixing chemicals, a sewing machine, candy maker, wood working gear – just by knowing how something is best done by using them can go a long way.

Maybe there is a certain kind of new cards you could create. A new kind of Tarot deck, the best that's ever been. Maybe making jewelry, maybe not expensive stuff, but at least glass or crystal beads, and if it helps, then something like a bead but better.

Pirating would get you far. But unfortunately, also in hot water. That is a far easier way, to just produce copies of music, movies or games. But consider instead offering freeware conveniently on a disk. Just remember that I'd the first place people go to to make money: writing songs, making videos hoped to become popular enough to make money on, programing some sort of cheap game. There is just no money in that, at least not at all likely.

There are many short cuts. But it is a principle true that they won't get you anywhere. If they did, everyone would do them and everyone wealthy. More it is because of the fact that it is such a crowded area of beggars, basically.

As for me I've decided to write books. I never expected anything come of it, right away. And not even for awhile. I estimate I'd need 60- 80 books before I can expect good to come of it. Very few people write as much as I do. And no one writes what I do, being the creator of many good and new religions. I am only after a little fame online, someone who makes a positive difference. But if I am offered publication I will accept it, but only on commission, being free to continue writing free and public domain eBooks.

Good luck until you. Go after that killer idea and run with it. I promise you if you think long enough into it you will come up with something.

The Name Behind us, regarding us, representing us

What you call yourself as a practitioner of this religion, whatever it may be, is not so important as the name of Aeon behind us (pronounced "A" "On.") the name itself is of course of our Goddess. Her very name means ageless good within. As her name means ageless and is had within us all good things.

There is her name and her name is ruling. What we are and what we do is in her name. It identifies by name the good things we are and do. It is a readily given name for those who would know us. We are of Aeon. We are Aeonic her servants, the one whose name is lasting and eternal and inseparable from us.

Any given primary God of a religion represents it's people. Who would know Christians are Christian without their god of Christ behind what they do. Or Allah or Diane. To sum up what we do we say it is of Aeon. And in so saying people are firstly introduced to our Goddess and secondly, if they like, will join themselves with her. And it is more about joining ourselves with her than each other on an independent basis

If you like you may very well call this religion Aeonic and it's followers Aeonists.

But when people are to regard us, let her name be behind us. And the sum of what we do, her equation. That we are delivered by her. That her presence be built and concentrated. That we come to know her. That so she is. That so shell ever be.

She is our Mother Goddess that teaches us to love all the good things of the world in which we gather the good and remove from it the bad. A spirit that gives. A spirit in our material wealth that we find a spirit and soul, that being a piece of our own. That she has put into our heart the love of good things and so she is taken from all good material things.

She is the one thing that we must all share in common.

Our culture, and our culture isn't there's

For very good and sound, logical reasons, we are not racist. We are a-racist in fact meaning that we hold no regard to racist things. That is a thing of other people to no good effect. We do not identify with our own race. We find no earned pride from a racial basis. If we see some racist occurrence on the news, we keep our distance, not feeling that such an attack was on “all of our own kind” but rather just a bad occurrence to an individual. We don't care what racist things are said unless they are entirely blatant and aggressive. But even then it is a personal way that we are offended, not one we take as a racial mis-demeanor but rather someone who has offended us and not our race.

This stuff isn't our culture. Our culture is our religion. Our culture is found in the other followers of our religion as well as us. We should not be made to: appreciate, acknowledge and honor, participate, or otherwise be made to connect with other cultures. We gave our own culture. We shouldn't be made to share in the other cultures around.

We have our own people. We do our own things. We believe our own beliefs. If we consider a medical procedure against our religion then we should not be forced to undergo it. Sometimes, in many instances in fact, religion is more important to a person than life and death itself. A medical culture being forced upon us is intolerable: should not be tolerated by us or any one of any religion to whom it occurs. Life be damned. Sometimes religion is more important.

So I establish you as a people. I set forth the ways of this people through Aeon. And I present to you the greatest connection in life as with one and the other. And if anyone diverts you, misguides you, forces them into their ways, ways either a bad diversion from your chosen path and a way you don't wish to go, or misplaces you—forcing undesired involvement and participation among them. It be damned and removed from you with all strength of refusal!

Spit it out and call it bitter! Let them know these are not your concern. That the path you chose is being diverted by them. And that you refuse to go with them any further and to find someone else to help them and be with them.

Getting the upper hand over your enemies

The best action against an enemy, against them all collectively, is a cause to be a success in life making them jealous, dispersing them or in any way becoming better than them.

While you reside below the mountain with them they are your equals. But to rise above their plane in accomplishing goals that lead to worldly success is to surmount them.

People in your life could make you angry and treat you like just another nobody. But if you are working toward something good then at least you have that in heart and mind: that you are not going to stay undistinguished.

Money is power. Those that have it have tools that privilege them. They can do more and well, they can have better and they have resources that aid them in generally more freedom. They can even have around only those that are at their feet. They do not have to have objectionable and unwanted people in their lives. But the poor do! A poor person has to deal with the degrading, daily.

It holds true that there will always be those that don't like you, but there will always be those that do, too. But in obtaining things like fame and money, it is more like there will always be those that worship you and those that are jealous of you.

As long as you are doing well and getting to good places in life, others just don't bother you as much. And as for me I would like to tell my family that I am a published author, not to be better than them, not at all, but just for the honor of that it imparts.

Being whole with Man

(Hu) Man. A person has expected rules to be adhered to. In order to be whole with Man and be within it's brotherhood then those rules must never be broken. They are:

1. Do not kill anyone
2. Do not harm the innocent
3. Do not steal, and especially do not rob
4. Do not rape or sexually abuse anyone
5. Do not do sexually abominable acts
6. Do help the poor and do help those who suffer
7. Do what is best for everyone and be a good person, one and all.

This is really the only rules that are needed to be followed. And they are quite easy to keep. But in keeping them you are good and well with human kind. You are always then good enough no matter if you find within yourselves fault or not. And it is a good mantra to keep to know and tell yourself regularly that you are good enough.

But being in a "Brotherhood with Man," requires that you also help people in alleviating suffering rather than being a component to other people's suffering. You are either in this or apart from this. You either give a helping hand or let people continue to suffer. Granted you can't fix all problems but you can have the heart to do so, in some way or another.

Maybe you could donate to science, in any way that sciences need funding: for medical sciences, such as eliminating cancer, or funding science that is working on something such as accelerated seed growth that could lead to food for all. Anything that helps in such a way should be donated to.

The Aeonic Ritual

This is the Aeonic Ritual. It is an act of worship and solemnity toward Aeon. Before you perform it a particular mentality is beset.

To be thinking good things, things that bring peace. Not being nervous. Being the least bothered by anything. Doing things that make you feel peaceful before you undergo it.

With that, set up things for this ritual. You'll need a warm bath drawn and to be surrounded by your most favorite things. Your favorite possessions. Ideally they should be nostalgic items, things from your childhood. Place these around the bath, easily seen.

You will need a warm blanket. And you will need idols and an altar like place where they are on top. Put a candle or two, up to four, on top of it.

With all this in place enter into the bath and observe the good things in life, what it is about life that makes you feel good and grateful. Close your eyes and say Aeon is good. Aeon be here with me. Pause a good moment and open your eyes, looking around at these good things of yours. Then think about them arousing feelings of appreciation.

After this leave the bath and enter into your room. Bow before your altar and pray to Aeon. Tell her why she is such good and what you want from her in your life. Pray what you want to pray, saying what you want to say, focusing on the idols and then get into bed, wrapping yourself into a good blanket, going to sleep and before you do say Aeon is good. Aeon be here with me tonight.

And that is the Aeonic Ritual.

The Positive and the negative

It is plainly evident that the structure of our existence is based very heavily on a you yang design. There is male, there is female. And things come in two's, be them two eyes or even two middle holes. Two feet, hands, even two nostrils. There is night and day, the sun, the moon. There is life and death and this suggests that life goes beyond death, as the creation of a second, though separated, existence. If it was just one life and then another that is observable by us beyond the void, then that really wouldn't be a second life.

The coin doesn't know the other side. The wall cannot be seen through forwardly and back toward at one time. The foot first does it's own thing, and then the other foot it's things. And we have two lungs, not one, in bringing us life, but two and one in the nose.

There is being awake. And there is being asleep. There is clenching. And there is letting go. You can observe this in what is good and what is bad. Unless we knew what the bad was we would not strive to obtain what is good instead. These are deterrents. For God like people they would not be nearly as necessary in seeking good, because they are those that don't die and even have come to defeat suffering in many different ways. Most ways, if not altogether.

There is the past and there is the future and overall it can be observed that existence is in the middle. Our torso comes in between our walking steps. We inhale in then outward but there is also a pause between breath. When we clench we then hold, and then let go.

Imagine a person raising his hand. It rises up. It is brought back down. But the very present has it in between. And that is the direction of life, to take control of the present. We can think of the past or future but we do so in the present. And on the whole life is in the middle while the up and down forces a yes or no decision, never definite, or else it would not have been asked to begin with.

One side of the battery is for the flesh, the other side of the battery is for the spirit. This is seen in a person during a comma. Her/ his flesh is on but his spirit isn't.

Do it closely enough to perfect, or not at all

Perfection is one of the primary things that I teach. While you will hear often that nothing is perfect that is short sighted. It isn't in actually making something perfect. The word "perfect" only means really "the best possible result." And while there are no ends to that, that is the whole point. It is in trying, not in limitations, but in striving limitlessness.

Of course a person doesn't wish to do perfectly menial and impersonal work, that work that seems to serve no real point, especially regarding them. I foresee a spike in perfection. There are increasingly tools that aid in creativity. There are also, ever more, robotics and AI devices that are leading us into a time when they are doing this petty work we have to do, otherwise. As much as it has been said "they're going to take our jobs," that's not a bad thing! We will be left with doing our own work, work personally chosen by us.

I think the first instance of my high regard toward perfectionism came from the book The Magic of Recluse which had within it's early chapters a people given specific jobs, each one and another, that were expected to be done perfectly. A very good book. I was in the library one afternoon looking through the books for about an hour before I decided upon it. That really appealed to me. Here was a character in it expected to do wood working "perfectly."

Socialism is good in theory but I was once told by a police officer, a friend for sure, who told me that it's real problem is that with it, there is no competition. Every one is treated the same. And that brought to mind a phrase I've thought of regarding it "all for society!" which meant to me, the best thing in life isn't itself but is this thing called "society" where all are regarded as equal within it.

In some areas perfectionism is a bad thing, no doubt, in trying to build a Utopia you are going to come up with a big sloppy mess!

So many jobs to choose from

My brother Josh is a jack of all trades and I really admire him for that. He works on cabinets, wood working and houses, or just mows lawns, most of all. And is generally good at doing a large handful of things.

If you ask for inspiration from Aeon, she will give it.

If you are willing to go through School getting the right, needed kind of degree then good for you very good unto you. That will spike your pay and open the door to many choices not available to those who don't. It could be a quickly gotten certificate or license, too. In fact my mother did just that, one for nursing, and landed a job she loves.

My dad goes to service school occasionally keeping in touch with electronics, as he fixes those gigantic sprinklers you only see in the central south. And my sister worked for Google at one time.

There are a lot of jobs but I imagine it can be easy to miss many of them either thinking they aren't there and not having it come before you just not considered. But be aware, there are many out there, even enough to be very particular toward what you wish to do.

As for me I am paid by the government. I still believe in work, which is why I write, from five to seven hours each day in fact, from ten to fifteen pages a day! It is what I want to do and "thanks" to having Schizophrenia suffering from it terribly without medication, the government has essentially taken up where my parents took off. I was just 20 when I got on SSI. And believe it, in many ways I deserve it. But my aunt will tell you, at least I am doing something. Most of us just sit all day in front of the TV wasting money.

You may only be aware of a small amount of things you could have as a job. But there are many.

Speak your mind

Let others know what you want and expect from them and in so doing be bold, if you have to. They might consider their side over yours. And you shouldn't be expected to have their side rule over your own. I have to tell the new people in my life often that I just do not like talking to people. Someone asked me recently if I wanted to smoke with them. I told him no, and he was offended. But that was his side of things—but what about what I desire? To be alone, to smoke alone, as it is my time to do so the best.

Some people will impose on you their principles while upholding them more than your own. Don't let them. Live more accordingly to your wishes, preferring to keep things your own choice.

If someone is bursting through sound boundaries you have in place remove them from before you. If someone is taking from you, halt them. As for me I have known people who spent every dime on sodas, candy, and cigarettes then they come to me asking for a lighter, or my lesser tobacco. I buy tobacco to last all month. They get the expensive stuff and when they run out, turn to me, and I turn them down every time. But in their minds he is selfish. He isn't giving. I only wanted a little.

Some will want a lot of work from you. Really that is just their way of pushing you out. If they don't want you around then they should say so. And if the work they require of you seems excessive, believe me, you'll be happier elsewhere.

Just don't invite hell fire upon yourself. I thought I was immune to being harmed. But I'd gotten into the habit of insulting others. I had about me an agitated mood. I would let others know to keep a distance in the .ost offensive ways. And then one day after calling a person this totally offensive thing I was struck in the face. But that's jail for you!

Anger is an important emotion. It tells you your needs. It makes you get them. You could be angry in a sound logical way or go about a way most ineffective, yelling, even threatening. Profusely steaming. Or you can reason with a person even while angry. If they still don't conform to your wishes be straightforward and blunt. If you are asking for them to leave, to stop bothering you in a polite way and they don't, then command them to.

Just remember that you have principles to toward life, and not to let others over ride them with their own.

Leaving the cult of Anti-Ism

I have observed that children are out of their minds flooded with thoughts pertaining to: anti racism, anti sexism, anti gender choice, anti smoking, fed to them by rigorous propaganda. The world they live in is induced by such thinking.

It isn't bad to be against these, most naturally if they effect you. Someone like our current president here in the modern states who has shown just a little indication that he is racist and sexist, has made enemies of the nutty kind. Of the lunatic kinds. It shows. It really shows how crazy they are. They may have thought Obama was the Anti Christ in small doses but people really are out of their minds when it comes to Trump, in very large numbers. I have known people that were convinced he would be impeached. They found such faults in him that were a portrait of him plainly worthy of condemnation and impeachment. Why? Well because he is white and has shown indications of racism and sexism.

These thoughts are driven deeply into people's minds. Their whole world is painted and layered thick in the stuff. You cannot turn on the TV and see anything new devoid of this cult like thinking. It is very much a cult like thinking. It can be so against obesity that it taxes sugar. It can be so cult like as to be a massive disaster when anyone states the least of social graces expected from the "sensitive."

Cult like thinking describes it perfectly. While I was in jail there was a man convinced that the white guards were against him, to a highly paranoid extent. And his speech was riddled with things about white people, that they are the cause of all oppression against him.

The thing is that anything that deeply rooted and as towering so high is a great excess that covers every part of a persons thinking. It is a cult that society has made. And it is getting worse. And like any other cult it is difficult to leave. It will probably follow them until they die.

*Advisory against smoking used to be plain and simple, though still easily enough understood for anyone to make a choice. But it graduated to far further extent than necessary. Now every imaginable malice is attributed to smoking. And these people presenting every bit of questionable evidence will guard it like fort Knox. Of course they aren't going to let vapor cigarettes slide because they no longer have any purpose. They certainly are not going to admit that there is no longer a problem. Even if vapor ciggs have harmful ingredients, they don't have to. And of course they are the first to gather funds for propaganda speaking the word and the last to find things such as a cure for lung cancer.*

The Aeonic Coven

The Coven of Aeon

Is a group gathered together to honor and worship Aeon. This group contains a small group of people, a tight circle, who one by one who are a piece of Aeon, each their own piece.

Then each person being their own piece of Aeon bring together into their selves the whole of Aeon.

This Coven can include worship and praise of Aeon but what matters the most is appreciation and acknowledgment. They should each be sensitive to the lessons they learn from her.

Rituals can be designed and really it is up to you and your own the extint in which that is done and what this group's direction should be regarding her, but Wiccan beliefs are preferable to Satanic ones, although that may be more or less true to some. Hell you can make it somewhat Wiccan and somewhat Satanic, and on top of that somewhat Christian. As other covens and religious circles do so can you, as you find it most suitably implemented.

And some final notes:

Remember, there is power in numbers, even in redundancy. Two heads can do better than one. Two, three, the more the better, allowing each other to keep their uniqueness.

Remember that mistakes happen and we all commit them. Be forgiving toward each other. People in general aren't bitter for long.

Observe others and in relation to what they bring about due to it. Take your lessons from the wise. Avoid the way of fools. Establish the best things in life as others have so done. And work a little everyday on a purpose, as it is in fulfilling a purpose that the practice of this religion most greatly shines.

Fill empty time the best way that it can be done. Try not to waste your time or basically rot away before menial entertainment, the kind produced on a shelf in a box or even through fingers in games. Have a well rounded life that encompasses everything. Be willing to do things that are challenging. Do things that are different. Do not remain as stuck on any one given thing. It is Aeonic to do so.

Be adventuresome at heart. Bring into joy to your limited days. Go forth in good ways visiting places you normally would not do so otherwise, had Aeon not been in your heart. Take it upon yourself to venture around, even to far away places, because Aeon would like to be with you there.

The whole root of Anti Voidalism has been presented here in it's primary book, this, The Book of Aeon. But like a Bible it will have been made of more books (the very word Bible means a collection of different books into one.) And so this one will be, before done, at least five books made for it in total. The Old Testament of the Holy Bible itself was rooted in just five books, The Books of Moses. And I hope here to have created a good foundation to a new religion even if it isn't continued for some bad reason.

To know what is a good time is the strongest command of Aeonism, that you find good things to put into your life, living as well as can be. In engaging in talks with Aeon when I was destitute, I was through and through very desirous of very many things. And those who say that material wealth doesn't matter haven't been without, haven't been homeless. But Aeon was my only source of comfort. And I promised her at that time in my life that I would do her much honor, for her help, and help me she did. And I am living up to her promise. I carry her as my Goddess. I always will put her first.

And I hope you come to realize her and incorporate her into your life as well. May for you great luck and blessings abound. Amen. So it's been said.
